Roosevelt Plans To Raise Navy's Strength; Curb Propaganda

By William V. Nessly.

President Roosevelt late yesterday ordered into effect this country's mandatory embargo on arms, munitions and implements of war to European belligerents, and revealed plans to boost Navy personnel to what would amount to full mobilization strength.

Earlier, the President had formally proclaimed American neutrality and there were these additional war-inspired developments:

Restrictions were placed on the use of the Panama Canal by belligerent vessels.

Travel Rules Fixed

New rules were established covering travel of Americans in Europe.

Panama, with the support of the United States, issued invitations for a meeting of all 21 American republics to consult on means of keeping hostilities away from the Western Hemisphere.

The idea of naval convoys for Americans returning from the war zone was abandoned in favor of normal procedure by flag-marked American vessels, avoiding zigzag courses, "blackouts" and secrecy as to sailing dates and other details.

Steps were under way to restrict propaganda for communism or any dictatorship, or against our system of Government.

British List Contraband

Precautions likewise were being taken to prevent this country being used as a center for gathering of information to help some of the belligerents.

The British Embassy here issued a list of articles and materials considered by the British government as absolute contraband of war.

Regulations were promulgated limiting solicitation of funds for aid to warring countries, restricting gathering of such funds, in general, to humanitarian purposes by persons or groups licensed by the State Department.

Mr. Roosevelt told his press conference that the activities against propaganda and the closing of gaps in the Nation's defense could be done without legislation and were being done without waiting for the special session of Congress that may be called to consider revision of the neutrality law.

Navy Increase Explained

He said that increasing the Navy personnel by some 15 per cent would be necessary to bring it to full peace-time strength, but a Navy spokesman pointed out that the 15 per cent boost would mean, in effect, full mobilization strength, with sufficient personnel to man all watches and all guns and ready for any emergency.

The President performed the task of decreeing the arms embargo, the elimination of which he has steadfastly sought, shortly before 5:30 p. m.

At 1:36 p. m., the formal declaration of neutrality, issued under general provisions of international law, had become effective when Secretary of State Hull affixed the great seal of the United States to it.

The second proclamation, invoking the neutrality law, stops further shipment of planes or other war materials ordered here in large quantities by France and Great Britain. Mr. Roosevelt seeks revision of the law to permit "cash and

300 Americans Volunteer in Paris; Brigade Is Formed

Paris, Sept. 5 (AP).—The French department of the American Legion announced tonight that more than 300 Americans had offered their services to France.

Officials said an ambulance section comprising 19 cars donated by United States citizens and manned by American volunteers would report soon to the French army.

Col. Charles Sweeny, who is organizing the American Brigade to aid the French, said registrations of Americans wishing to serve had reached approximately 2,000.

Sweeny said the organization would be a unit of the French foreign legion.

Canadian officials declared today that only British subjects were eligible for Canadian forces.

Only Writer at Front Sees Nazis Round Up Civilians as Snipers

Wholesale Move Ordered as Germans Call Shooting by Population Worst Difficulty; Newsman on Way to Poland Sights 20 Airports

By Louis P. Lochner
Associated Press Staff Writer

With the German Army of the East, Sept. 5.—A general order for the roundup of all civilian males of arms-bearing age in sections of Polish Silesia conquered by the Germans was issued today by the military command because of persistent sniping.

An officer accompanying me on this trip to the front explained that the greatest single difficulty met by the German army in its drive on Poland was civilian sniping.

For example, he said that yesterday here in Czestochowa there was a sudden burst of gunfire from houses which cost the lives of a German captain, several lieutenants and an undisclosed number of privates. Sniping had been resumed this morning and 30 men were conducted to the city hall—now a German commandery—as among those believed guilty of participation.

Death Through a Window

We followed them to the city hall. Directly outside it I saw a German soldier keeping guard under a big tree. The protruding boots of a German lieutenant, a straw mat thrown over the body and a scabbard and blade lying crossed over the mat, spoke in eloquent language of death.

I then was told that this lieutenant was shot the previous night as he worked at his desk close to a window.

I came here as the first and only correspondent at present permitted at the front by the selection of three American news organizations in Berlin, who acted on the invitation of German authorities to permit a neutral American newspaperman to see what was going on.

I flew in a military plane to Oppeln, and then traveled under military escort across the Polish border to Czestochowa.

I saw the famous black Madonna in Jasnagora monastery in Czestochowa. The monastery and cathedral have not been harmed.

Poles Sob in Shrine

In an interview Father Norbert Motylewski declared:

"The miracle-working image of the Czestochowa virgin on the Jasnagora (light-colored mountain) was not damaged in any way nor has Jasnagora suffered in any way."

As we entered the chapel we saw a huge crowd of Polish worshipers attending mass. Some—both men and women—lay prostrate, kissing the marble floor, their hands extended. Among them were many sobbing women.

My military escort and I had hardly left the chapel when the grim reality of war broke upon us. We heard intermittent shots. On

British Sink 3 Nazi Ships, Report Destruction of U-Boat

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 6 (Wednesday).—The British ministry of information said early today that three German ships "which might have been converted into armed raiders" had been destroyed by British forces in the Atlantic.

The communique also asserted "there is reason to believe that the attacks by the Royal Air Force on naval units in German waters were even more successful than was originally reported."

It was reported unofficially that one German submarine was sunk 125 miles from where the liner Athenia sank Sunday night.

A previous communique issued yesterday said royal air force units had heavily damaged two German battleships near the Kiel Canal which links the Baltic with the North Sea. The British reported some casualties in the bombing raid. The ministry of information communique today said British warships had attacked German submarines "in several localities." It added that "several" British merchant ships had been "attacked or sunk" by German submarines.

The statement was believed to refer to the raid on the German naval bases at Wilhelmshaven and Brunsbuttel on the North Sea Monday in which direct hits were reported to have been scored on at least two German warships.

One observer interpreted the reference in today's communique to indicate that the British bombers registered more than one direct hit on one of three German pocket battleships. If one was seriously disabled, only four first class large German naval units still are in commission, he said.

The ministry of information said the German government had announced the laying of mine fields which apparently already have claimed several neutral ships—a

Stocks Soar $1 to $15 in Record Day

Commodities Jump Limit in Buying Reminiscent of 1929

By Claude A. Jagger,
Associated Press Financial Editor.

New York, Sept. 5.—Prices shot upward in the Nation's stock and raw staple markets today in the most frenzied "war" buying ever witnessed.

Speculative commodities, such as grains, rubber, wool and hides, were sent kiting in a manner surpassing anything seen on any day in the World War years, or in the price boom when the dollar was taken off the gold standard in the spring of 1933.

The stock market jumped $1 to more than $15 a share, in the most violent bulge of prices since March 15, 1933, when they snapped back spectacularly after the banking holiday.

At the same time, there was a rush to sell high grade bonds and other conservative investments to raise cash for "war" speculation. United States Treasury Bonds, in the heaviest trading ever seen in the stock exchange, surpassing even the post war trading flurries in Liberties, again sagged, although still holding well above par.

Unable to Quote Prices

The violence of the price swings made business transactions impossible in many lines as producers found themselves unable to quote prices. Such contracts as were made in many instances specified that delivery would be made only at the prevailing price at the time.

The Associated Press daily price index of 36 basic commodities had the unprecedented rise of 3.34 percentage points to 69.31 per cent of the 1926 average level, the highest in 17 months. Only three weeks ago it was the lowest in five years.

Some Wall Streeters expressed concern over the fervor of the buying, lest it bring Federal intervention to stabilize prices. The operating head of one of New York's largest retail establishments said:

"There is a feeling about that maximum price fixing of essentials by the Federal Government is a distinct possibility."

Reminiscent of 1929

Wall Street was thronged with excited and smiling faces, in contrast with its lackadaisical atmosphere of many months. Brokers customers rooms were filled, reminiscent of 1929. Some said clients turned up whom they hadn't seen in years.

Several of the commodity markets, where options for future delivery are traded, have rules governing maximum fluctuations permitted in any one day, and in several of them, trading all but ceased after prices rose to the limit.

This was true in wheat and corn at Chicago, up 5 and 4 cents a bushel, and at New York in raw sugar, up ¼ of a cent a pound; wool, cottonseed oil, cocoa, each up 1 cent a pound; raw hides, crude rubber,

Athenia Missing Cut to 44; 200 Hurt; Survivors Tell of Shelling

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 5.—Forty-four persons were believed today to have lost their lives in the torpedoing and sinking of the British liner Athenia by what survivors declared was a submarine which shelled the stricken vessel.

Rescue reports received here and at the United States Maritime Commission office in New York showed 1,374 of the liner's 1,418 passengers and crew were picked up Sunday night in the ocean wastes west of Scotland. There were 311 Americans on the Athenia.

The Maritime Commission said the American steamship City of Flint had radioed the names of 100 American and 112 alien survivors. At Glasgow, there were listed 112 Americans and at Galway, 96. This totaled 318 Americans, indicating an error in listing.

Previously, the Donaldson Line, owner of the Athenia, had listed 506 survivors landed at Galway, Ireland, 497 at Greenock, Scotland, and 150 on the yacht Southern Cross.

200 Reported Injured

The Donaldson Line had reported last night that the City of Flint picked up only eight persons.

About 200 were said to be injured and many suffered from exposure.

The City of Flint, 7,500-ton freighter built in the World War, will disembark its survivors at Halifax, Nova Scotia, the nearest North American port, U. S. Maritime Commission officials said. It is expected to reach there Saturday.

State Department officials said the Maritime Commission was asking the Coast Guard to meet the City of Flint and supply it with food and water. The Flint was not expected to reach the United States for a week.

Survivors ridiculed the German assertion that no German submarine had torpedoed the Athenia and that the liner must have struck a mine. (Official quarters in Berlin advanced the mine theory yesterday.)

Capt. James Cook, master of the stricken vessel, said that immediately after the torpedo was fired the submarine rose to the surface and shelled the Athenia.

He said there was a "heavy loss of life."

"One shell carried away the main mast," he said.

"It was evidently aimed at the wireless room but missed its mark."

Other officers and passengers corroborated his statement. Earl Stanhope, lord president of the council, told the House of Lords there was "no question whatever as to what was the cause of the sinking.

"The mere suggestion that a mine had been laid by this country is obviously ridiculous and absurd.

Lifeboat of Women Lost

"That part of the sea is too deep for the laying of a moored mine and it would be an absurd place to put mines because Great Britain is anxious to keep her trade going in and out in the ordinary course of events without interference from mines."

He said there was a rumor that "a shot was fired but there is no official confirmation of it yet."

The Athenia, bound for Canada, was sunk Sunday night 200 miles west of the Hebrides Islands.

Capt. Cook was among 430 survivors who were landed at Galway by the Norwegian steamer Knut Nelson. Two British destroyers landed 600 others, including 200 injured, at Greenock.

One survivor, John McEwan, of Glasgow, said it was "rumored that 90 perished." Others said the figure was far greater and pointed out that a score or more must have drowned when a lifeboat full of women was shattered by the propeller of the Knut Nelson during rescue efforts.

Pathetic scenes occurred as survivors were landed at Galway and Greenock, uniting families which had been separated as they crowded into lifeboats.

Children who had lost their parents were carried weeping from the rescue ships to hotels or hospitals.

Most of the rescued were scantily clad in pajamas or other light clothing and many of them were without shoes. They had spent hours in open boats—some as long as 12 hours.

McEwan, describing the ordeal, said:

"We had a terrible time, and we knew at once what it was. We all

Paris Fires on Planes

Paris (Wednesday), Sept. 6 (AP). — Several airplanes, presumably German, flew over Paris today at 3:14 a. m. (9:14 p. m., E. S. T. Tuesday) and were fired on by French anti-aircraft batteries. The air raid siren sounded at 1:41 a. m. sending people into their cellars for the second successive night. The alarm was lifted after 2½ hours.

No explosions were heard in the center of the city. It was not learned immediately whether any bombs had been dropped in the suburbs. Persons watching for the planes said they were unable to see them because of their high altitude but they heard them plainly.

Officials Escape to Lublin; Soldiers Dig in for Stand; Smigly-Rydz Resignation Reported; U. S. Envoy Leaves

By the Associated Press

Budapest (Wednesday), Sept. 6.—Diplomatic dispatches from Warsaw early today said the German army, after a lightning advance from the north, was shelling the city.

The Polish capital, already evacuated by the Polish government and foreign embassies and legations, was described as partially destroyed under the heavy bombardment.

While the German forces were reported to be shelling the city heavily, airplanes conducted continual raids.

The government was said to have fled to Lublin, 100 miles southeast of Warsaw.

Diplomatic dispatches said the Germans early today were less than 50 miles from the capital and moving rapidly through a broken Polish front.

The dispatches suggested that the Poles, if unable to stem the advance of the Nazi troops, would take up positions on the east bank of the Vistula River, which runs through Warsaw.

All legations and embassies were said to have followed the Polish government to Lublin. Earlier dispatches indicated the American Embassy, headed by Ambassador Biddle, had moved to Luck, 220 miles southeast of Warsaw.

These reports, which circulated in Budapest diplomatic circles, said Marshal Smigly-Rydz, head of the Polish army, had offered his resignation. At the same time it was learned that Germany had closed her frontier with Hungary, as well as the Slovak-Hungarian frontier, Tuesday evening.

The reasons for closing the frontier were a mystery here, but the reports caused a stir in diplomatic circles.

Up to the present time there has been a limited train service operated from Budapest to Vienna and from Budapest to Bratislava, the Slovak capital.

Troops Hold Germans 31 Miles Away

By Edward W. Beattie, Jr.
United Press Staff Writer.

Warsaw, Sept. 5.—Evacuation of bomb-scarred Warsaw was speeded up late tonight while Polish troops stubbornly held back onrushing German troops only 31 miles northwest of the city, at Plonsk, according to official announcement, to protect the flight of civilians.

It was impossible to locate government officials and the rumble of heavy fighting outside the capital became louder during the evening.

Poles were begging gasoline for their cars or attempting to hire horse-drawn vehicles to join the flight from Warsaw, south and east toward the Rumanian frontier.

An official radio announcement said that Polish divisions, rushed up to stem the enemy advance on the north, had halted the Germans along a 45-mile front north and northwest of the capital.

The announcement said that the Poles had dug in for a "great battle" between Plonsk and Ciechanow, 44 miles directly north of the city, for the defense of the capital.

If the Germans break through there, the Poles will fall back to their heavily-fortified line nine miles outside the city along the Vistula and Bug rivers.

The announcement of the stemming of the German steam-roller advance restored some amount of optimism in Warsaw, but the people realized that there undoubtedly will be intensified attacks by Nazi planes.

Civilians Being Removed

Evacuation of civilians, it was said, is more necessary than ever to organize a thorough defense of the capital and removal of the population will be carried on with greater intensity.

The general impression to be gained in Warsaw tonight was that the Polish army is determined to fight to the death in defense of Warsaw.

It was reported that the Polish garrison in Gdynia on the Baltic had attacked Nazi forces in Danzig to the east, supposedly in a diversion operation to aid the besieged "suicide battalion" holding out in the Polish fortress at Westerplatte in Danzig Harbor.

Two field guns, several machine guns and many prisoners were reported to have been taken in the attack on Danzig.

The press section of the foreign office was deserted tonight and no one could be found to tell what had become of officials who yesterday were handing out war communiques.

Foreign embassies were deserted, or left in the hands of skeleton staffs. British and French newspaper correspondents were gone. Only a handful of Americans remained.

The thud of artillery became louder. The heaviest thuds seemed to be from the south or southwest.

No one dared to use what precious little gasoline he had left to drive out and find out for himself.

The American consulate still was functioning and doing its best to aid Americans to leave the city, with Consul General Davis and Consul Cramp carrying on. United States Embassy officials remaining are L. M. Harrison, second secretary; Maj. William H. Colbern, military attache, and E. A. Syruous, of the commercial attache's office.

The evacuation picked up momentum when German war planes bombed the city at 9:10 a. m. in the second raid of the day. Since then there have been no further raids, although planes were visible high overhead once or twice later.

Trucks and embassy cars with huge flags attached to their roofs stood in the courtyards of the government ministries, but there was little to suggest to the ordinary Pole in the street that evacuation was going on.

The average man in Warsaw, with his wife and children, had little conception of the true situation.

He seemed not to realize that Warsaw lay before a sweep more crushing than the German drive through Belgium in 1914.

It was told that the Polish army remains virtually intact and determined to carry on resistance, possibly retiring to a line behind the Vistula to the east or perhaps massing before the river.

The Polish army cannot be regarded by any stretch of the imagination as a beaten one, but it is bending before the overwhelming weight of German artillery, tanks and airplanes.

According to Polish reports the German drives are being spearheaded toward Warsaw in crushing blows.

These blows are being led by German tanks in squadrons of 120, 240 and sometimes even 450 smashing along in formation.

I know the German tanks, some of which have 3-inch guns in their turrets. I know their capable crews. I watched them operate in maneuvers and I saw them occupy Czecho-Slovakia.

The British embassy also joined the evacuation, departing for an undisclosed destination.

It may be days or weeks before things come to an actual crisis in

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

ADOLF'S SILLY SYMPHONY

No one in the Capital has been surprised to hear that there is a full-fledged Division of Misinformation in the Nazi propaganda bureau, staffed by some of the best German minds.

Harlan Miller

Nor has the news caused much astonishment that von Ribbentrop's foreign ministry often prepares two opposite statements about the same set of facts, neither of them true and each planted where it will do the most good—or harm.

* * * *

In fact, if the world's dilemma were not so tragic, there would be a grotesque, fantastic humor about the whole Hitlerian symphony a la Disney.

His dogs of war plunging against stone walls, his mosquito fleets of bombers racing off to threaten inoffensive neighbors, his own furious role of a mad Donald Duck raving about fabricated injustices—all must seem uproarious to the gods on high.

* * * *

Some of my best friends enjoy Wagnerian music. Though I like much of it myself, some of it seems so much excessive noise.

Maybe it is inevitable that I detect a resemblance, then, between Hitler's syncopation of lies, slanders, rumors and threats and certain pompous, windy blasts of the Wagnerian compositions Hitler loves and imitates so well. Who will write the first Communazi opera?

First there's a dreamy prelude by the wood-winds. How marvelous are the Germans!

What a race, what a Volk! The only worthwhile people in the world, tra-la! How god-like as they nibble at their blutwurst, ta-da-dum!

Watch closely, gieb achtung, und soon you will all be like me und Goebbels und Gott!

* * * *

Then the shrill brasses of propaganda weave a discordant overture of little lies . . . The Poles have mistreated Heinrich Schmalz, an honest Polish-German spy who lives in Warsaw to practice a little treason and espionage. Donner und Blitzen! They can't do that to our Heinrich! Maybe they haven't done it. But it makes a good horrendous story.

* * * *

Now the fiddles take up the burden of rumor and slander.

It is intolerable that in Poland 32,000,000 Poles should lord it over 700,000 Germans! The Poles are decadent, the Poles are aggressors, the Poles are barbarians, the Poles are sotties!

The Poles are plotting with the Russians, the Poles are plotting with the Rumanians, the Poles ogle the German girls!

And at last the shrill horns are shrieking, the drums are thumping, the bass viols are strumming imprecations, the deep horns are thundering threats. We will bomb their grandmothers! Nobody can bomb like us! Better that 32,000,000 Poles be slaves than that one German should forget Hitler und das Vaterland! Tomorrow we march, if we can't scare you today! How we growl over the radio!

* * * *

The stage is filled with Wagnerian dragons and swan barges; valkyries fly through the air, Nazi heroes beat their chests. Surely the whole world is scared of us Germans now; we're a little scared of ourselves.

Surely everyone is on his knees? If not, maybe we refuse to buy from 'em, we refuse to sell to 'em, we start a Nazi party in their country, we bribe a few statesmen.

Back comes the piccolo and a little slander about English statesmen and Polish generals; it sounds very soprano.

* * * *

Give me 25 brass horns, 50 fiddles, 15 wood-winds and 10 drums and I can put almost any day's Berlin outpourings to music.

It wouldn't sound good, though, and it doesn't look good in print.

We reprint it in our newspapers, and in our papers it masquerades as truth.

But the only bit of truth about it is that some expert liar walked across the Wilhelmstrasse and handed it to a bewildered newsman as an official handout . . .

Perhaps our newspapers would be smart to put an asterisk after each German official statement, thus*, with a footnote below saying: *Official Nazi statement; probably untrue.

Record Crowds Visit Monument

Washington Monument had the biggest August in its history this year, with 139,560 visitors, the National Park Service reported yesterday.

The figure was 7,000 greater than in the previous record—August, 1937—and 35,000 more than for the same month last year. The elevator carried 124,824 persons to the top of the 555-foot shaft last month and 14,736 climbed the stairs.

13. Despatching from the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, any armed vessel owned wholly or in part by American citizens, or any vessel, domestic or foreign (other than one which has entered the jurisdiction of the United States as a public vessel), which is manifestly built for warlike purposes or has been converted or adapted from a private vessel to one suitable for warlike use, and which is to be employed to cruise against or commit or attempt to commit hostilities upon the subjects, citizens, or property of a belligerent nation, or which will be sold or delivered to a belligerent nation, or to an agent, officer or citizen thereof, within the jurisdiction of the United States, or, having left that jurisdiction, upon the high seas.

14. Despatching from the United States, or any place, subject to the jurisdiction thereof, any vessel built, armed or equipped as a ship of war, or converted from a private vessel into a ship of war (other than one which has entered the jurisdiction of the United States as a public vessel), with any intent or under any agreement or contract, written or oral, that such vessel shall be delivered to a belligerent nation, or to any agent, officer, or citizen of such nation, or where there is reasonable cause to believe that the said vessel shall or will be employed in some service of such belligerent nation after its departure from the jurisdiction of the United States.

15. Taking, or attempting or conspiring to take, or authorizing the taking of any vessel out of port or from the jurisdiction of the United States in violation of the said act of the fifteenth day of June, A. D. 1917, as set forth in the preceding paragraphs numbered 11 to 14, inclusive.

16. Leaving or attempting to leave the jurisdiction of the United States by a person belonging to the armed land or naval forces of a belligerent who shall have been interned within the jurisdiction of the United States in accordance with the law of nations, or leaving or attempting to leave the limits of internment in which freedom of movement has been allowed, without permission from the proper official of the United States in charge, or willfully overstaying a leave of absence granted by such official.

17. Aiding or enticing any interned person to escape or attempt to escape from the jurisdiction of the United States, or from the limits of internment prescribed.

24-Hour Limit Set Between Departures

AND I do hereby further declare and proclaim that any frequenting and use of the waters within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States by the vessels of a belligerent, whether public ships or privateers for the purpose of preparing for hostile operations, or as posts of observation upon the ships of war or privateers or merchant vessels of an opposing belligerent must be regarded as unfriendly and offensive, and in violation of that neutrality which it is the determination of this government to observe; and to the end that the hazard and inconvenience of such apprehended practices may be avoided, I further proclaim and declare that from and after the fifth day of September instant, and so long as this proclamation shall be in effect, no ship of war or privateer of any belligerent shall be permitted to make use of any port, harbor, roadstead, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States as a station or place of resort for any warlike purpose or for the purpose of obtaining warlike equipment; no privateer of a belligerent shall be permitted to depart from any port, harbor, roadstead, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States; and no ship of war of a belligerent shall be permitted to sail out of or leave any port, harbor, roadstead, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States from which a vessel of an opposing belligerent (whether the same shall be a ship of war or a merchant ship) shall have previously departed, until after the expiration of at least twenty-four hours from the departure of such last mentioned vessel beyond the jurisdiction of the United States.

If any ship of war of a belligerent shall, after the time this notification takes effect, be found in, or shall enter any port, harbor, roadstead, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, such vessel shall not be permitted to remain in such port, harbor, roadstead, or waters more than 24 hours, except in case of stress of weather, or for delay in receiving supplies or repairs, or when detained by the United States; in any of which cases the authorities of the port, or of the nearest port (as the case may be), shall require her to put to sea as soon as the cause of the delay is at an end, unless within the preceding 24 hours a vessel, whether ship of war or merchant ship of an opposing belligerent, shall have departed therefrom, in which case the time limit for the departure of such ship of war shall be extended so far as may be necessary to secure an interval of not less than 24 hours between such departure and that of any ship of war or merchant ship of an opposing belligerent which may have previously quit the same port, harbor, roadstead, or waters.

Vessels used exclusively for scientific, religious, or philanthropic purposes are exempted from the foregoing provisions as to the length of time ships of war may remain in the ports, harbors, roadsteads, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Secretary Hull Signing Neutrality Proclamation

Only 3 Warships At Time Permitted

The maximum number of ships of war belonging to a belligerent and its allies which may be in one of the ports, harbors, or roadsteads subject to the jurisdiction of the United States simultaneously shall be three.

When ships of war of opposing belligerents are present simultaneously in the same port, harbor, roadstead, or waters, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, the one entering first shall depart first, unless she is in such condition as to warrant extending her stay. In any case the ship which arrived later has the right to notify the other through the competent local authority that within 24 hours she will leave such port, harbor, roadstead, or waters, the one first entering, however, having the right to depart within that time. If the one first entering leaves, the notifying ship must observe the prescribed interval of 24 hours. If a delay beyond 24 hours from the time of arrival is granted, the termination of the cause of delay will be considered the time of arrival in deciding the right of priority in departing.

Vessels of a belligerent shall not be permitted to depart successively from any port, harbor, roadstead or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States at such intervals as will delay the departure of a ship of war of an opposing belligerent from such ports, harbors, roadsteads, or waters for more than 24 hours beyond her desired time of sailing. If, however, the departure of several ships of war and merchant ships of opposing belligerents from the same port, harbor, roadstead, or waters is involved, the order of their departure therefrom shall be so arranged as to afford the opportunity of leaving alternately to the vessels of the opposing belligerents, and to cause the least detention consistent with the objects of this proclamation.

All belligerent vessels shall refrain from use of their radio and signal apparatus while in the harbors, ports, roadsteads, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, except for calls of distress and communications connected with safe navigation or arrangements for the arrival of the vessel within, or departure from, such harbors, ports, roadsteads, or waters, or passage through such waters; provided that such communications will not be of direct material aid to the belligerent in the conduct of military operations against an opposing belligerent. The radio of belligerent merchant vessels may be sealed by the authorities of the United States, and such seals shall not be broken within the jurisdiction of the United States except by proper authority of the United States.

No ship of war of a belligerent shall be permitted, while in any port, harbor, roadstead, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to take in any supplies except provisions and such other things as may be requisite for the subsistence of her crew in amounts necessary to bring such supplies to her peace standard, and except such fuel, lubricants, and feed water only as may be sufficient, with that already on board, to carry such vessel, if without any sail power, to the nearest port of her own country; or in case a vessel is rigged to go under sail, and may also be propelled by machinery, then half the quantity of fuel, lubricants, and feed water which she would be entitled to have on board, if dependent upon propelling machinery alone, and no fuel, lubricants, or feed water shall be again supplied to any such ship of war in the same or any other port, harbor, roadstead or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States until after the expiration of three months from the time when such fuel, lubricants and feed water may have been last supplied to her within waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. The amounts of fuel, lubricants, and feed water allowable under the above provisions shall be based on the economical speed of the vessel, plus an allowance of thirty per centum for eventualities.

No ship of war of a belligerent shall be permitted, while in any port, harbor, roadstead, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to make repairs beyond those that are essential to render the vessel seaworthy and which in no degree constitute an increase in her military strength. Repairs shall be made without delay. Damages which are found to have been produced by the enemy's fire shall in no case be repaired.

No ship of war of a belligerent shall effect repairs or receive fuel, lubricants, feed water, or provisions within the jurisdiction of the United States without written authorization of the proper authorities of the United States. Before such authorization will be issued, the commander of the vessel shall furnish to such authorities a written declaration, duly signed by such commander, stating the date, port, and amounts of supplies last received in the jurisdiction of the United States, the amounts of fuel, lubricants, feed water, and provisions on board, the port to which the vessel is proceeding, the economical speed of the vessel, the rate of consumption of fuel, lubricants, and feed water at such speed, and the amount of each class of supplies desired. If repairs are desired, a similar declaration shall be furnished stating the cause of the damage and the nature of the repairs. In either case, a certificate shall be included to the effect that the desired services are in accord with the rules of the United States in that behalf.

No agency of the United States Government shall, directly or indirectly, provide supplies nor effect repairs to a belligerent ship of war.

No vessel of a belligerent shall exercise the right of search within the waters under the jurisdiction of the United States, nor shall prizes be taken by belligerent vessels within such waters. Subject to any applicable treaty provisions in force, prizes captured by belligerent vessels shall not enter any port, harbor, roadstead, or water under the jurisdiction of the United States except in case of unseaworthiness, stress of weather, or want of fuel or provisions; when the cause has disappeared, the prize must leave immediately, and if a prize captured by a belligerent vessel enters any port, harbor, roadstead, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any other reason than on account of unseaworthiness, stress of weather, or want of fuel or provisions, or fails to leave as soon as the circumstances which justified the entrance are at an end, the prize with its officers and crew will be released and the prize crew will be interned. A belligerent Prize Court can not be set up on territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States or on a vessel in the ports, harbors, roadsteads, or waters subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Export of Powder Or War Implements Is Barred by Law

The provisions of this proclamation pertaining to ships of war shall apply equally to any vessel operating under public control for hostile or military purposes.

AND I do further declare and proclaim that the statutes and the treaties of the United States and the law of nations alike require that no person, within the territory and jurisdiction of the United States, shall take part, directly or indirectly, in the said war, but shall remain at peace with all of the said belligerents, and shall maintain a strict and impartial neutrality.

AND I do further declare and proclaim that the provisions of this proclamation shall apply to the Canal Zone except in so far as such provisions may be specifically modified by a proclamation or proclamations issued for the Canal Zone.

AND I do hereby enjoin all nationals of the United States, and all persons residing or being within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, to observe the laws thereof, and to commit no act contrary to the provisions of the said statutes or treaties or in violation of the law of nations in that behalf.

AND I do hereby give notice that all nationals of the United States and others who may claim the protection of this Government, who may misconduct themselves in the premises, will do so at their peril, and that they can in no wise obtain any protection from the Government of the United States against the consequences of their misconduct.

This proclamation shall continue in full force and effect unless and until modified, revoked or otherwise terminated, pursuant to law.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

DONE at the City of Washington this fifth day of September in the year of our Lord, nineteen hundred and [Seal] thirty-nine, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and sixty-fourth.

By the President:

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Arms Embargo Proclamation

President Roosevelt's proclamation establishing the arms embargo, after citing the sections of the neutrality act providing for such action, said:

"Now, therefore, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, acting under and by virtue of the authority conferred on me by the said joint resolution, do hereby proclaim that a state of war unhappily exists between Germany and France; Poland; and the United Kingdom, India, Australia and New Zealand, and I do hereby admonish all citizens of the United States, or any of its possessions, and all persons residing or being within the territory or jurisdiction of the United States, or its possessions, to abstain from every violation of the provisions of the joint resolution above set forth, hereby made effective and applicable to the export of arms, ammunition or the implements of war from any place in the United States or any of its possessions to France, Germany, Poland, or the United Kingdom, India, Australia and New Zealand, or to any other state for transshipment to, or for the use of, France, Germany, Poland, or the United Kingdom, India, Australia and New Zealand."

Mines Guard German Ports In North Sea

National Geographic Society Points Out Importance of Area

The importance to Germany of her North Sea coast is emphasized by the mines laid there immediately upon the outbreak of war, the National Geographic Society pointed out yesterday in a special bulletin.

"Germany's shipping points are confined to the Baltic and North seas," said the bulletin. "On the west, between the continent and England, the North Sea is an open expanse of water, unobstructed by non-German territory and islands such as narrow the northwest exits from the Baltic. Moreover, it includes all sea lanes from the west to Germany's two most important ports —Hamburg and Bremen.

"The North Sea coastline of Germany is only about 150 miles long, extending in a jagged northward sweep between the Netherlands and Danish frontiers. It is protected behind a series of small islands. This coast offers a certain natural shelter to submarines and other wa. vessels. Just under the shoulder of one indentation is the strongly fortified naval base of Wilhelmshaven. Forty miles to the northeast is Cuxhaven, also a naval base and sea resort for Hamburg. Other important towns in this coastal area are Emden, Bremerhaven, Norden, Heide and Husum.

Two Important Rivers

"Across the great German plain to the low coastal region of the North Sea flow two of the nation's most important rivers—the Weser and the Elbe. Emptying into the Deutsche Bucht (German Bay), the Elbe leads to the west entrance of the strategic Keil Canal which links North and Baltic Seas across the narrow Danish-German peninsula. Near its mouth lies Hamburg, one of the world's leading ports and No. 1 doorway for much of Germany's food and raw-material necessities. To the southwest, Bremen, on the Weser, is the warring country's vital receiving point for imported cotton, tobacco and rice.

"Wilhelmshaven, chief naval station of the Reich on the North Sea, is situated on the western shore of Jade Bay, due south of the island of Helgoland, German sentinel of the North Sea. It is about 365 miles by airline from London or less than two hours' flight by modern aircraft. British planes already have bombed shipping there, according to reports.

"Wilhelmshaven was planned as a naval station in 1853 when its site was purchased by Prussia from the Grand Duke of Oldenburg. The city is new as German cities go. It was built in 1855 and its harbor was not opened to commercial shipping until 14 years later. Its 25,000 inhabitants today are employed largely in the naval station, shipping, and shipbuilding. Wilhelmshaven was the scene of the mutiny among seamen that spread over the German fleet in 1918.

Cuxhaven Naval Base

"Cuxhaven, another German naval base, where it is reported five of twelve attacking British military planes were brought down, is 400 miles by air from the British capital.

"The city lies on the west bank of the Elbe River only a few miles from the point at which the stream flows into the North Sea. It is about 40 miles northeast of Wilhelmshaven. Hamburg, one of Germany's leading ports, is 64 miles up the Elbe from this city.

"Cuxhaven, too, is a comparatively new city. It was formed in 1773 by the consolidation of two villages. While naval operations are important to its 18,000 inhabitants, Cuxhaven also is a popular seaside resort. In normal times daily sailings are made from this port to Hamburg, Helgoland, and important seacoast islands.

Donovan Puts 1941 Needs at $62,916,577

District budget estimates for 1941 total $62,916,577, Auditor Daniel J. Donovan said yesterday as the Commissioners prepared to hold public hearings on them tomorrow and Friday.

This is $1,532,967 less than departmental estimates submitted to the Commissioners last year, but almost $15,000,000 more than the current District appropriations.

None of these figures take into account the additional trust account appropriations of $1,895,000.

Requests for time to testify at the two-day public hearings are fewer than last year, Geoffrey Thornett, secretary to the Commissioners, stated. Only a score of witnesses have been scheduled.

The Commissioners have indicated their intention of holding the 1941 budgetary estimates down to the level of the present appropriations.

Don't Discuss War In Public, Army, Navy Officers Told

Army and Navy officers have been directed to assist the United States remain neutral by refraining from public discussion of the European war, it was revealed yesterday.

Officials said that a communication was sent to all officers of the armed services "advising" them not to talk about the action of the belligerents in the war, lest someone consider they were taking sides. This was interpreted as including discussion of the tactics or possible maneuvers of either side.

In revealing the action, it was stressed that it was in no sense a "gag" order, but merely a warning to officers of their duty as representatives of the United States Government.

'Hearse' Talk Sells Policies, Agent Says

Also, Some Speculate By Insuring Neighbors, Monopoly Inquiry Hears

The introduction to the fine art of selling industrial life insurance—complete with funeral illustrations—enlivened testimony given yesterday by a succession of District insurance men before a Congressional monopoly subcommittee.

"I will metaphorically draw a hearse up to the prospect's door and park it there until he signs," commented Bert B. Cohen, an agent of a local insurance firm.

He persuaded prospects, many of whom were colored, to buy insurance by convincing them that death might take place "almost momentarily," said Cohen.

Insurance as Speculation

The agent added that he knew of some colored families who pay insurance premiums amounting to more than their actual income. Some colored policyholders, he said, insure their neighbors "as a matter of speculation."

Introducing committee members to insurance slang, Cohen told them of "tombstones" or "lamposts," which, he said, are terms used for policies agents falsely claim to have sold in order to meet the quota demanded by their office. The agents, he said, pay the premiums on "tombstones." The witness alleged that when he joined the company, an assistant manager instructed him how to write "tombstones."

Selling Contests Described

In an effort to show that "high-pressure" sales methods are employed by firms handling industrial insurance, Gesell drew from several witnesses testimony to the effect that insurance companies frequently hold inter and intra-office selling contests, and that it is the general rule to establish quotas of new business which agents are expected to aim at.

Gesell introduced a letter from W. V. Walker, vice president of the Life and Casualty Insurance Co. of Tennessee, asking H. A. Hollins, manager of the Washington office, "to contact all of your men . . . and let them know what we are up against [in a contest with another division] and ask them to really 'turn on the heat' for production this next week."

Denials Heard

Hollins testified, however, that he depended on steady gains "to avoid any slumps from high-pressure business."

Buford Eubank, field superintendent of the company, denied it was the practice of agents to sell policies they know will lapse, in an effort to make an apparent increase in their business.

Robert Roberson, jr., for 18 years connected with Life and Casualty, testified that agents themselves "frequently" paid the two-week advance premiums required on new policies.

Despite large turnover in agents—a condition noted by several witnesses—Albert E. Call, Washington agent for the Life Insurance Co. of Virginia, said he could not recall any dismissals for "non-production." Neither could John W. Wright, local superintendent of the Home Beneficial Association, of Richmond, nor L. H. Hanna, vice president of the Equitable Life Insurance Co. of Washington.

Poles Retreat, Awaiting Mud, Say Strategists

Cavalry May Turn Tide When Rains Come, U. S. Officers Believe

Attempting to explain the apparent inability of Polish troops to offer much resistance to the German war machine, military experts here are of the opinion that the Polish army is fighting a withdrawing action—waiting for the rains to come.

The rainy season usually starts in Poland in the latter half of September and when it comes should greatly hinder the program of the German army, it was said. The latter is considered superior to Poland's army, but principally because it far outstrips it in mechanization and more modern weapons.

Mud, however, is the great enemy of tanks and other mechanized weapons, and the friend of the cavalry—an arm which makes up a considerable part of the Polish military strength. Horses should be more effective than machines on the mud roads which prevail in Poland's country-side, and may turn the tide, army officers said.

Unless the reputedly able Polish army is much weaker than had been thought, strategists can only explain the great gains made by the Reich by assuming the Poles are deliberately retreating to a prepared defense line to wait for the rainy season to come to their aid—a season which usually extends into winter.

The only aid Poland can receive from its allies, outside of aircraft, experts point out, is a strong attack on the western front intended to force Hitler's generals to shift troops from Poland to strengthen the Siegfried line. It will take months or even years, to penetrate this strongly held position, most strategists agree. The string of concrete underground fortifications ranges from the Swiss to the Netherlands border, and cannot be flanked without British and French troops violating the neutrality of those states.

A long war is looked for by most experts, with the British and French naval blockade the deciding factor. Germany lacks a sufficient supply of oil and iron, among other essentials to fighting a war, and even should she overrun Poland and be able to buy from Soviet Russia, the latter could not satisfy all the Reich's needs, it is said.

Navy Purchases Plane Engines, Supplies of Metals

The Navy pushed forward its expansion program yesterday, purchasing new aircraft engines and steel for warships, costing more than $1,000,000.

A $929,074 contract was awarded to the Pratt and Whitney Aircraft division of the United Aircraft Corporation for engines and spare parts, one of the largest awards of this character ever let by the Navy. Six contracts totaling $359,011 were awarded for steel, brass forgings for guns, and lightweight alloys.

The largest steel contract was let to the Carnegie Illinois Steel Corporation, Washington, for $222,975.

Browder Used False Passport, He Admits

Dies Probers Told Of 'Harmony' With Russia Despite Pact

By the United Press.

Earl Browder, general secretary of the American Communist Party, yesterday admitted to the Dies Committee investigating un-American activities that he has traveled on a false passport but he refused to give details, pleading Constitutional immunity.

He insisted, however, that it was not common practice for party members to use false passports, despite Committee Counsel Rhea Whitley's efforts to obtain further information on the matter.

Browder at one point declared that the "closest harmony" exists between his organization and the Communist Internationale in Russia.

Unaffected by German Pact

"Does that closest harmony exist now that Mr. Stalin has signed up with Mr. Hitler," asked Representative Thomas (Republican) New Jersey, a committee member, explaining he referred to the nonagression agreement.

"Yes, the closest harmony and agreement," Browder replied.

Earlier, Browder, who was his party's candidate for President in 1936, testified that a mysterious man named "Davidson" offered him $250,000 if he would persuade his followers to nominate President Roosevelt as their standard bearer that year.

He also declined to answer Whitley's questions whether he ever used the names George Morris, Stewart and "Brozenberg or Brazenburg."

Years ago, however, he said, he used the names "Ward" and "Dickson" in signing letters and carrying on party activities.

The $250,000 offer, he said, was first made in Communist headquarters in New York. "Four or five" subsequent meetings were held in the dining room of the Grand Central Station to discuss the offer, he said.

Donors Believed Republicans

The Communist leader said that "Davidson" never told him who would donate the money, except that "they were all Republicans." "Davidson," he said, claimed to represent six or seven donors, any one of whom could furnish the sum he mentioned.

To "draw out" the mysterious stranger, he continued, he took Heywood Broun, newspaper columnist, with him to one of the meetings, but could not elicit the desired information. Later, he said, a man named, "Stone," of the New York Post editorial department, made a similarly unsuccessful attempt.

"The theory," asked Chairman Martin Dies, (Democrat), of Texas, "was that if you indorsed Mr. Roosevelt it would hurt him?"

"That's right," the witness replied.

200 Communists Here

Browder said he was aware that the G. O. P. wanted him to indorse the President in 1936 and that he purposely refrained from doing so, limiting his indorsement to New Deal policies initiated by the Chief Executive.

Communists in the United States, he said, have about 100,000 members in 42 States. Most of the membership he said, is concentrated in industrial cities, with 25,000 to 28,000 in New York, 7,000 in Chicago and about 10,000 in three Pacific coast States. The District of Columbia, he said, has about 200 members.

The party, he said, has not been engaged in "underground" organization work since 1923.

'Not Our War,' Held Reich Peasant View

London, Sept. 5 ((AP) via Radio)—"It is not our war," German workers were described as saying today in a message sent over news tickers in London.

"We have nothing in common with the present regime; the German workers and peasants do not want war and have nothing in common with the Nazi regime," said the communication to the Independent Labor Party from the Independent Socialists in Germany.

Alien Students Leave Here to Take Up Arms

The little cosmos which is International Student House reflected the war situation yesterday. Departing Europeans left gaps which may go unfilled. Students from nations not involved in hostilities discussed the crisis in terms of the world outlook they've learned under that roof.

Mrs. Alfred Lowry, director of the house, has an immediate stake in the complications of American evacuation in Europe. Her 17-year-old daughter, Elizabeth, who has been abroad, mostly in Germany, for two months, is now stranded in Geneva. Her party had expected to sail on the Empress of Australia September 9. But when its sailing was canceled the group waited in Geneva and asked in a cable for advice on "safe neutral transportation."

Only a few days ago Rene Nordmann, a Swiss, said good-by to the International Student House, 1708 New Hampshire avenue northwest, to sail for home and report for military duty. "He was ready to go quickly—and calmly," said Mrs. Lowry.

Gandhi Supports British, Assails Nazi 'Brute Force'

Simla, India, Sept. 5 (U.P.).—Mohandas K. Gandhi today expressed sympathy with Great Britain and France in the new European war "from a purely humanitarian standpoint."

He revealed that he had appealed to Fuehrer Hitler to abandon his method of warfare and added: "Hitler knows no god but brute force."

Gandhi's stand is of vital importance to Britain, for should he have counseled opposition to the war by the millions of Indians who venerate him as a living saint, British aid from the rich Indian empire would have been curtailed seriously.

Swashbuckling Pilot Says He Will Retire From Speed Flying

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Sept. 5.—Col. Roscoe Turner sped to his third triumph today in the 300-mile Thompson trophy classic—which he immediately declared was the last race of his 12-year competitive career.

The swashbuckling flier gunned his big aluminum Turner-Laird, powered by a Pratt and Whitney Twin Wasp, 282.536 miles an hour for a convincing victory over six other pilots.

Shortly after the start he thought he had cut a pylon and rounded it again, but made up this handicap to finish more than 10 miles ahead of Tony Levier, Montebello, Calif., over the 10-mile closed course. Pylon trouble had cost him two previous Thompsons.

The Chicagoan, just a shade behind his record of 283.419 miles per hour set in 1938, won $16,000 and became the only man to take the speed classic three times. For second place, Levier collected $8,000.

"I've won the Thompson three times and I can't keep stretching my luck," Turner said. "This is my last race. I'll be 44 the twenty-ninth of this month. This is a young man's game. I'm going to start a flying school in Indianapolis."

Third place and $4,000 went to Earl Ortman, Canadian Colonial Airways pilot from Montreal and Newark, N. J., who flew 254.435 miles an hour in his Marcoux-Bromberg. Levier's second place time in his Schoenfeldt Special was 272.538.

Steve Wittman, spectacled flier from Oshkosh, Wis., finished in fourth place, but on the question of whether he rounded one pylon hinged whether he collected $2,500. His speed was 249.537.

Harry Crosby, of Burbank, Calif., flying the plane he designed after a "flying fish," went 244,522 miles an hour for fifth-place money of $1,500. Lieut. Joe Mackey, of San Antonio, flying a plane owned by Turner, was sixth at 232.926 for $1,000.

The other entrant in the race—which took 63 minutes and 42.52 seconds for Turner to win—was Art Chester, of Los Angeles.

Botkin Named New Warden Of Lorton

To Take Charge of District Reformatory About October 1

The District Commissioners yesterday appointed Claude O. Botkin, now chief probation officer at the Southwestern Reformatory of the Bureau of Prisons at El Reno, Okla., to the post of superintendent of the District Reformatory at Lorton, Va.

Botkin, who will take office about October 1, fills the vacancy created by the death of Col. William L. Peak in an automobile accident June 16.

The appointment was recommended by the Board of Public Welfare and indorsed by the new welfare director, Robert E. Bondy, and Ray L. Huff, general superintendent of penal institutions. Botkin will be paid $4,600 a year, less $600 for housing.

Before going to El Reno in 1933, Botkin for 17 years was employed at the Illinois State Reformatory, where he went through the ranks to become assistant superintendent. Previously he was farm manager at Indian Head, Canada, and in 1913 and 1914 was employed by the Chicago & Alton Railway.

A native of Atlanta, Ill., he was in the Marine Corps from 1908 to 1912.

Trapped Poles Fire at Hitler, Berlin Hears

Control of Silesia And Division of Foes Crushed Are Claimed

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 5.—The German high command today announced the capture of the rich Polish industrial cities of Katowice and Chronow in a drive toward Poland's historic ancient capital of Krakow, and declared "the foe, partly retreating in disorder, was badly shattered."

Capture and retention of the two cities would give Germany control of the highly important industrial region of Upper Silesia.

[Germany's northern army in Poland, striking down from East Prussia on the north, was reported to be within 50 miles of Warsaw, while another army pushing up along the main railroad line from the southwest was said to be only 70 miles from Warsaw, the United Press said.—Editor's note.]

In addition, the German forces reported they had crushed the entire Polish Seventh Division southeast of Czestochowa, which was captured two days ago. (A division usually is between 10,000 and 15,000 men.)

Berlin, completely dark tonight in a total blackout, had not been visited by hostile airplanes up to 11:40 p. m. (5:40 p. m. Tuesday, E. S. T.).

Anti-aircraft forces were alert to repulse any attacks but there were no warnings of approaching planes.

(A Polish radio report broadcast more than an hour before stated 30 Polish planes had raided Berlin Monday night.)

Germany's air force was jubilant over its asserted mastery of Poland's air and over the sound thrashing it claimed giving the British Royal Air Force in their first engagement yesterday.

On the western front, officials said at 8 p. m., not a single shot had been fired by either France or Germany.

The supreme army command communique which asserted Polish defenses were crumbling—largely in disorderly retreat before the German advance to the east—also announced the British air raid on German naval bases had utterly failed.

The air attack occurred last night at Wilhelmshaven and Cuxhaven and was met, according to official German announcement, "with perfect co-ordination of German fighters and antiaircraft guns."

Two more British planes, of reconnaissance type, were reported shot down over Hamburg this afternoon.

German confidence that the Reich will be master of its own air, as it claims that of Poland, increased with an official announcement that the British lost 12 out of 20 planes which flew over northwestern Germany just before dusk last night (including the Wilhelmshaven and Cuxhaven raiders).

The announcement said, "No damage whatsoever was inflicted by the British." (Britain announced two of Germany's five battleships were heavily damaged, admitted the raiders suffered "some casualties.")

Seven planes were said to have been shot down between the Netherlands border and Wilhelmshaven and five more over Wilhelmshaven Harbor. All the British bombs fell in the water, it was stated.

Another British bomber was reported shot down over Daggerbank, but it is possible this report concerns one of the participants in last night's battle.

The army communique asserted the German land forces were pushing ahead "irresistably" through Poland.

Reichsfuehrer Hitler was announced to have personally observed the spectacle of a German army column crossing the Vistula River just south of Kulm—the Polish city of Chelmno, Pomorze (the Corridor) province—and carrying its advance onward from the east bank of the river.

[Hitler was under fire of Polish rifles near Krone-on-Brahe, but he was not injured, International News Service reported. The fire came from a Polish detachment trying to fight its way out of an encircling German maneuver.

Fired at Automobile

[It was early afternoon, and the Fuehrer's automobile swung around a bend of a road only 400 yards from the point where the Poles were at bay. They immediately fired upon the automobile, but without effect, the car speeding out of range in a few moments.

[Hitler tonight was in that portion of the battleground where fighting is heaviest. He has been touring the Reich battle lines in Poland since Monday Morning.—Editor's note.]

Northern Pomorze was described as lost to Poland, the army communique stating:

"Since yesterday, indications point to a growing recognition by the encircled Polish Corridor army of their hopeless situation and they are trying desperate individual operations to force open the iron ring."

Elven Polish planes were reported shot down today between Warsaw and Lodz, making a total of 42 reported destroyed in the last 24 hours and 65 in the last 48 hours.

The Poles, taken by surprise, it was stated, gave up Katowice and Chorzow without exploding the mines placed under their great industrial plants, leaving the greater part of the industrial equipment intact.

Bremen Unaccounted For

Progress also was reported in other sectors in Poland.

Officials said they still had no news at 6 p. m. of the fate of the German transatlantic liner Bremen which was racing for home from New York when Great Britain and France declared war.

Officials also said Germany "expects the Netherlands as well as other neutral countries to open fire" when foreign military planes fly over their territory. It has been charged here repeatedly that Great Britain broke the Netherlands neutrality by sending bombers over that nation to Germany.

Some of the leaflets dropped in western Germany Sunday night by British planes (London reported 6,000,000 such tracts were dropped and 3,000,000 more Monday night) were brought to Berlin tonight. They were small handbills with printing on either side and said Germany had forced Great Britain into a useless war, referring also to President Roosevelt's peace proposals.

Describing the British air raid on the naval bases, an official report said that first warning of the approach of the flight—said to have been made up of two-engined Vickers bombers—was given by the coastal commands at Ostfriesland and Nordfriesland. This enabled the antiaircraft batteries to be ready for immediate action.

At 5:50 p. m., said the report, the planes appeared over the mouths of the Weser and Elbe rivers and German pursuit planes, which already had gained altitude, attacked the British and drove them down into antiaircraft fire.

The report asserted that only one British bomber reached its goal, but was hit at once by a shell and crashed into Wilhelmshaven Harbor, while the crew of another bomber was captured after its pilot was killed in the air.

U-Boat Reported Sunk Near Athenia

put on our lifebelts and went to our stations. The submarine then dived out of sight and several times during the night when we were in the lifeboats we heard the submarine passing below us.

One member of the rescue crews related:

"I saw a group of five boats and in the water a number of young children who had been drowned. The boats were full, some of them badly flooded, and some had people clinging to their sides."

College Girl Saw Shelling

At Galway, Maxine Robinson, 16, of Austin, Tex., one of 166 college girls finishing a vacation in Europe, said, "we were in the lifeboat only a few minutes when there was a flash and we felt something whiz past us going in the direction of the liner."

All of her party were saved.

Robert Gillan, of Glasgow, a member of the Athenia's crew, said he saw a 12-year-old girl lying dead in a deck chair, her body torn by shell splinters.

One of the most pathetic survivors was Frau Hubscher, a German woman able to speak only a few words of English, who was taking her 15-year-old son and 9-year-old daughter to the United States to join her husband, a naturalized American. The two children were taken into a lifeboat and Frau Hubscher was being lowered when the rope snapped. She was taken in another boat and had not seen the children since.

A Mrs. Fisher, of New York, too distraught to take any food, sat in a hotel at Glasgow asking for news of her 6-year-old son.

"When the Athenia was struck," she said, "I rushed out of my cabin calling for my son. I saw him at one of the companionways but before I got to him everything was plunged in darkness.

"I never saw my boy again. I distinctly saw the German submarine come to the surface after it had torpedoed us."

Mrs. Fisher was wearing a thin cotton dress. She had no shoes, for like many other passengers she had given them to be used to bail the lifeboat. Her arms and legs were badly bruised.

In one group in Glasgow was Tom Connolly, of New York, his wife and three young boys. Mrs. Connolly had a deep gash across her forehead.

A Mrs. Sutherland, 60-year-old Ohio woman, sick in bed when the Athenia was torpedoed, was hoisted by ropes to a lifeboat. "I received injuries all over my body," she said, "and I was in the small boat for ten hours before being picked up."

Mrs. Kathleen Sommerville, of Toronto, said, "I was with my son David in a cabin when suddenly I heard a tremendous explosion.

"My first thought was for my child. I handed him into a lifeboat. I got into another lifeboat. Twelve hours later I was picked up by a warship.

"You can imagine how delighted I was when I found that David was safe upon my arrival at Greenock."

Thomas McCubbin, of Montclair, N. J., told a story of a mother's effort to save her baby.

"I was standing on a ladder helping women and children into lifeboats," she said, "when a woman threw her infant into my arms like a sack of potatoes crying, 'for God's sake save my child.' I saw mother and child reunited at Greenock today.

Sub Gave No Warning

"I can tell you that the German submarine gave us absolutely no warning before she torpedoesd us."

A 17-year-old boy, Harry Bridge, and his mother, of Abilene, Tex., also were among the survivors. "I had gone up to the deck where we sat down near the stern. Suddenly there was a terrific explosion. Clouds of smoke arose from the sides of the ship and a huge spout of water jumped about 70 feet above the boat and came down into the lifeboats, half filling them.

"My friend, Sheldon Gunn, was going to join his air force unit in Canada. He was thrown down the hatch. I never saw him again.

"I made my way along the companionway to get my lifebelt from my cabin. On the way I met my 19-year-old sister, Constance, and she gave me instructions where to meet her.

"When I reached my boat station I could not see her. Mother and I got into a boat and just as it was pulling off I saw Constance in another boat. Neither of us now knows where she is."

In Galway, Betty Jane Stewart, of Dallas, said she did not know how the ship was hit. Everybody kept very calm, she added.

Gordon Gramberg, of Duluth, exchange teacher, said he saw several dead in the cabin class after a torpedo struck.

Edward O'Connell, of Brooklyn, N. Y., sobbed as he said his wife must be dead.

Passengers praised Dr. William Wilks, of New York, whose wife and two children were missing, but who constantly attended the injured.

Don Gifford, of Schenectady, N. Y., and Barbara Rodman, of Garden City, N. Y., were among survivors brought here by rescue vessels.

"I was asleep when the explosion came," said Gifford. "The terrific force pitched me down on the floor. Immediately there was a complete blackout."

Gifford recalled he could see nothing, although he "distinctly remembered two detonations almost sumultaneously."

Gifford said he struggled to get on deck, amid "an awful sound of rushing water and almost overpowering fumes."

"As I made by way to the deck, I encountered at many points the bodies of those who must have been killed in the explosion"

Saw Puffs of Smoke

On deck, he related, all seemed in order at first, but "as the boats were slow in being cleared there was a series of rushes between boat stations. Women and children were being flung into any ouen boat that was ready to take off.

"Out to sea I distinctly saw puffs of smoke."

"We were aboard the lifeboat for about 10 hours before being taken aboard one of the rescue ships at 6:15 in the morning.

Miss Rodman was in the dining salon of the ship when the explosion came.

"Dishes went flying all over the place," she said. "The fumes were so thick we thought we would be asphyxiated. When I got up on deck, I saw a column of smoke, I should say about a wile away, on the port side.

Later, she said, they heard "another explosion" which "seemed as if it were right under the lifeboat."

Rome Removes Bomb Shelters As Nazis Gain

Advance Hailed as Evidence Italy's Aid Will Not Be Needed

By the Associated Press

Rome, Sept. 5.—Premier Mussolini gave a new indication that he was not thinking of going to war at present as workmen today began taking down air raid shelters which had been erected hastily a week ago.

The shelters consisted of planks laid against walls throughout the city. They were to have been covered with sand bags.

The government continued, however, to requisition trucks for taking supplies to the 1,700,000 men under arms.

Italians failed tonight to see how the British and French forces could strike Germany hard enough to save Poland.

Reports of the German army's advances toward its eastern objectives were received with manifestations of pleasure as indicating that Adolf Hitler still could dispense with Italian aid.

Commentators said Hitler was carrying out his "solemn promise" to win the war with Poland in a few weeks. Much was made in the fascist press of a situation in which, the newspapers said, the French had not yet fired a rifle shot. Headlines reporting "nothing new on the western front" were prominently displayed.

Gdynia, Warsaw and Krakow were reported in the press to be the three German objectives whose occupation could give ultimate victory.

98% of U. S. Youth Ready to Fight For Us, Poll Shows

Only 12 per cent of young and stalwart Americans would go any further than raise an eyebrow if England or France or any other of the so-called democratic countries on the other side of the globe were attacked by one or all of the dictatorships, the Junior Chamber of Commerce announced yesterday on basis of a survey made by the magazine Future.

The poll showed 98 per cent would defend the United States. 80 per cent would take up arms to defend Canada against invasion, and 52 per cent would defend South or Central American countries.

League Suspended, Because of War

Geneva, Sept. 5 (AP).—Employes of the League of Nations were told today that due to events "the work of the League of Nations hase been interrupted."

Joseph Avenol, League secretary, in a speech to the employes added that he had an unbreakable faith that the idea of the League would be born anew as a result of the war.

New York-Emden Cable Cut Off

New York, Sept. 5.—The cable between New York and Emden, Germnay, by way of the Azores, operated jointly by the Western Union and the Commercial Cable companies, has been out of commission since Sunday, it was revealed tonight.

It was recalled that this was the German-owned cable which Great Britain cut in August, 1914.

up 2 cents; tin up 5 cents, and raw silk, up 15 cents.

Nonferrous metals were quickly jacked up. Copper companies were unable to determine a price for hours, but finally fixed it at 12⅛ cents a pound for immediate delivery, up 1½ cents. Zinc was advanced ¾ of a cent to 5¾ cents, and lead ¼ cent to 5.30 cents.

Textile Markets in Confusion

Textile markets were in such confusion that many mills withdrew their schedules, and dealers were so overwhelmed with inquiries that many refused to answer their telephones.

The abrupt buying was attributed to sudden lifting of fears that the foreign conflict might bring a shock such as that of 1914, when the Stock Exchange was closed from July 31 to December 12. War buying had begun in a sudden turnabout on Friday and was continued in markets of The Netherlands and other neutral countries yesterday when American and Canadian markets were closed for Labor Day.

The long week-end gave time to study the records of 1915 and 1916—the days of steeply rising prices and frantic speculation in stocks which became known as "war brides" and "war babies."

When trading began there was such a rush to buy steels that opening prices in U. S. Steel and Bethlehem could not be made for an hour, and it took even longer to make a price in American sugar.

Buying swept through chemicals, metals, oils, rubbers and miscellaneous industrials. Rails joined the procession. Utilities and merchandising issues were backward as traders expected that might be hampered by rising costs, and motion picture issues were sold, on the theory their foreign revenues would be impaired.

Some statisticians calculated more than $3,500,000,000 had been added to the total quoted, or "paper," value of all shares listed in the exchange since Thursday. The Associated Press average of 60 representative issues rose $3.50 to $50.20, lifting it up to the levels of early August, and cancelling the "war scare" losses.

Turnover in the stock exchange totaled 5,932,150 shares, largest in nearly two years, and one of the biggest on record for a rising market.

Cancel Losses

Dupont, $183, up $13.50 (up $19 at one time); American Sugar, $34.87, up $10.87; Douglas Aircraft, $72, up $6.50; Case, $80; up $13; Texas Corporation, $46.50, up $6.75; U. S. Rubber, $46.12, up $4.87; Bethlehem Steel, $82.75, up $14.50 (up $16.75 earlier); U. S. Steel, $66.75, up $13.37; General Motors, $51.50, up $5.50; American Smelting, $55.50, up $7.50; Union Pacific, $100, up $5. Wright Aeronautical, a mercurial issue because of small floating supply, jumped $24 to $114.

Many traders, brokers said, were evidently acting on expectations that neutrality legislation, forbidding exports to belligerents of arms, ammunition and implements of war including airplanes, would soon be altered. Others said that exports of materials not falling in the "arms" category might be expected to expand sharply, with such big manufacturing and exporting countries as Germany, England and France preoccupied with war. Neutral countries, they said, would have to turn here for products they don't make at home.

In the bond market, there was a turnover of $30,246,000 par value, of which about 80 per cent was in U. S. Government issues, biggest the exchange ever saw. Bond men said this was not so significant, because most of the U. S. Government trading is usually done over the counter.

They said there were many offerings in small lots, which built up the total, but big banks and insurance companies were not selling, and the market was orderly.

French Pound North Flank on 125-Mile Front

Artillery Barrage Reported Concentrated South at Burgundy Gate

By the Associated Press

Paris, Sept. 5.—The left wing of the French army tonight increased the pressure on the northern flank of the German forces along a 125-mile front.

Army communique No. 4 tonight said simply:

"Our troops are in contact everywhere along the frontier between the Rhine and the Moselle. It is recalled that on the Rhine permanent fortifications border the river here and there."

This frontier, where the French Maginot line faces the Nazi Sigfried line some places a little more than a stone's throw distant, forms the northern flank of the German line.

This German line makes a sharp bend in the vicinity of Karlsruhe, Germany, where the French frontier juts out into a point forming the northeastern "corner" of France. The line follows the Rhine south to Switzerland.

Main Attack Southward

The main attack was to the southward, where the Burgundy gate passage between Vosges and the Alps leads to the German Black Forest. Here apparently was concentrated an artillery barrage.

The last line of the general staff communique reminded the French, who are becoming impatient for news of an offensive on a grand scale, that permanent fortifications guarded the line of the Rhine.

Semiofficial sources said the French were trying to soften the southern German lines while the northern forces were clearing hills and valleys near Luxemburg before starting any major offensive. Advance pillboxes and machine-gun nests dot the territory between the two fortifications.

Northern operations were believed to have brought the opposing French and German forces in more direct contact than in the south.

It was stated, however, that the activities had not advanced far enough to merit more than the official announcement that operations "develop normally."

No Natural Barriers

The 125-mile Rhine-Moselle front has the further advantage to attackers of having no natural barriers, as in the case of the southern half of the French-German frontier, which is marked by the Rhine river.

The rich mining and industrial Saar Valley is apparently the first French objective.

The French action was co-ordinated with Poland's efforts against Germany.

From the eastern theater of operations Polish dispatches reported Marshal Smigly-Rydz's troops were making some slight advance in their attack on East Prussian lines, although they acknowledged "strategic" withdrawals in some sectors. (A Berlin communique reported the capture of Katowice, Silesian industrial center, and large gains on other Polish fronts).

Counter-Offensive Timed

The Polish counter-offensive started simultaneously with the beginning of French operations against Germany's Siegfried line of fortifications yesterday.

At the same time dread aerial warfare, the unknown factor on a major scale in Europe's new war, was started. French planes continuously were scouting the Siegfried Line and spotting German communication lines.

The German air fleet answered with an early morning reconnaissance flight over the north and east of France which lasted three and a half hours. Air raid warnings sounded in Paris and northern French cities, sending citizens to special shelters, but the planes did not drop any bombs.

There was less information concerning French military operations than Polish, and officials frankly explained they had taken every precaution to veil their activities until preliminary contacts with the enemy have taken a definite turn.

Reports circulating in Paris of a great battle already developing were met with a semiofficial explanation that it was necessary to feel out the enemy first.

Sending Out Feelers

The normal development of contacts mentioned in communiques was understood in military circles to mean two main feelers were being put out to both flanks of Germany's "west wall" by the French Maginot Line forces.

The problem which Gen. Gamelin's general staff confronts was, in the broadest terms, no secret. It is one of delivering a sufficiently hard blow against Germany in the west to result in effective aid to Poland by forcing the Nazis to withdraw a substantial portion of their forces from the eastern front.

Hitler himself announced the German army's intention to clean up Poland quickly while holding off France and Britain behind the Siegfried Line so that almost the full German force could be used in the east.

Since Hitler has chosen to remain on the defensive in the west, France was left to take the initial offensive. Gamelin thus is the first French commander since Napoleon to be faced with such a problem.

Protection for Flank

This apparently means the elimination of the salient created by the frontier where it swings into Germany just north of Strasbourg. Should the main attack be delivered in the center line, study of a map shows it to be obvious that two wings of the German army might close in with a pincer movement endangering French success.

On the other hand, there are specific advantages to attacking either or both flanks without the dangers of a frontal attack. If such an operation were successful it would mean the German flank would have to swing back on Karlsruhe as a pivot, straightening out the line so that the French would [illegible] a position to deliver a frontal attack.

The Burgundy gate between the Vosges range and the Alps, just north of the Swiss frontier, would give the French flank protection from neutral Switzerland.

Such an attack not only might develop such strength as to force Germany to pull division after division from her eastern front, but also would follow the easiest and most advantageous route to Poland herself.

Nazis to Round Up Civilians; Assert Snipers Kill Officers

the boulevard below, German anti-aircraft artillery was set up in formidable numbers.

At a corner lay two dead horses—which nobody had had time to remove. To the left of us a whole row of buildings showed broken windows and bullet-riddled facades, while proceeding down the right side of the boulevard were about 30 Polish civilians closely guarded by steel-helmeted German soldiers, their rifles cocked. The Poles marched with their hands up.

These were the 30 arrested as sniping suspects.

When the order came yesterday afternoon that a plane was waiting for me at Tempelhof Airdrome, I was first taken to the war office to have my gas mask fitted and also to receive a first-aid kit.

At Tempelhof (Berlin's principal airport) what a change since I last visited it! Once as busy as any railway station with commercial planes starting and arriving, east, west, north and south, it now is a military airdrome with planes painted a forbidding greenish black. The open-air restaurant where hundreds of Berliners used to sit of a summer day, listening to music, now is empty.

Flies in Warplane

I had been told that one of Germany's most popular and biggest types of planes would be at my disposal. I approached it with visions of comfortable upholstered seats. Instead, I found machine guns protruding from the fusilage. Steel helmets, parachutes, first-aid kits and gas masks extended a cheering welcome as we climbed aboard.

Flying from Berlin via Breslau to Oppeln in Silesia I was struck with the stoppage of traffic on the big Hitler super-highways—except for army transports of all sorts. Germany is rationing her gasoline from the very start and nobody has the right to drive a private car unless he can show mighty good cause.

The railway tracks, too, seemed empty. For miles and miles I saw no passenger trains along this normally busy route; only occasional freight trains.

Passes 20 Airports

We passed some 20 military airports en route and everywhere bombers, pursuit planes, power divers encircled by batteries of anti-aircraft guns were ready at any moment to take the air.

It appeared that the poles, if they attempted to fly from Upper Silesia to raid Berlin, would have to jump at least 20 hurdles.

We had hardly passed over Oppeln when war at once seemed exceedingly close. For, we landed on an improvised airport at Stunebdorf where only a few minutes previously 87 bombers had returned from a raid.

At this and two other improvised airports nearby, my companion officer said, there were some 1,100 military planes of every description. The airport was fringed with camouflaged tents for officers and men. Some distance off were larger barracks.

A lieutenant colonel awaited us with a car as we landed.

Delayed at Oppeln

"No use going to Czestochowa today," he said. "We have reports that the civil population is sniping. I cannot take responsibility for the life of a neutral. So I will take you to Oppeln. By tomorrow (this was yesterday) Czestachowa will have been cleaned up."

All along the 13-mile route to Oppeln soldiers guarded every bridge and traffic police were in military garb.

The army had drawn on trained police from all over the country to regulate traffic in the military areas. Our lieutenant colonel's office was a converted school with cots in some rooms for officers; with a field telephone hastily installed, and with military maps sprawling over the floor and desk.

Two of his subordinate officers entered just as he was telephoning Berlin of my safe arrival.

Polish Arms Old

"We have tried to go to Czestochowa to take pictures of the Madonna," they reported, "but we had to turn around because farmers began to shoot at us from the fields as we hurried along the road."

Over in a corner there lay a few trophies. Sanitary kits taken from prisoners of war seemed very primitive and some of the rifles looked long outdated. Some cartridges were corroded.

At this lieutenant colonel's headquarters I was forcibly impressed with the fact that war today is made with the most modern means of information. Attached to each army group are staff photographers, cameramen and newsmen, because the war correspondents of the individual newspapers aren't permitted.

Paper Published at Front

In camp barracks and even at the front news is regularly broadcast to the soldiers; out along the first lines a loudspeaker on wheels brings the latest news broadcasts.

In addition, the various army groups—at least this is true in Silesia—publish a daily four-page newspaper in editions of 25,000. The soldiers are said to pay each other half a loaf of bread or three cigarets for a copy. The paper is distributed along a 50-mile front after rolling off the presses at 2 a. m. Talkies on wheels also get as close to the front as possible.

The city of Oppeln seemed uncanny in complete darkness. Close as it is to the border, the blackout naturally is as complete as human ingenuity can make it.

This morning at 4 o'clock we started for the Polish border. I had a first experience of what preparation for war means. The whole road to Czestochowa, 55 miles away, was one long procession of army trucks, officers' cars, horse-drawn provision wagons, marching labor camp lads, army engineers, anti-aircraft sharpshooters.

Emergency Bridges Used

The army of the east itself evidently had gone to the front days before my arrival.

Every bridge from the German frontier to Czestochowa had been destroyed by the retreating Poles. So army engineers, assisted by labor camp boys, hastily built emergency bridges over which our car went with such bumps that we wondered how the axles stood it.

The railway tracks, too, had been torn up and army engineers were at work repairing them. In some cases ready-made bridges carried along on army trucks were laid down; in others steel mattresses were laid out on the roads to help us over the worst bumps. Telephone gangs were everywhere stringing wires.

We saw big holes in the ground showing where artillery fire had struck.

Refugees Stream Back

While the army was thus ceaselessly pushing on—even horses were being transported to the front on motor lorries—we saw a curious contrast; Polish civilians flooding back from the east and proceeding westward again to their homes now that fighting had ceased and their land was in German hands.

Barefooted women with babies tied on their backs and one cow walking behind, old men carrying heavy burdens wrapped in bedspreads, boys and girls pushing their bicycles, on which they had fastened their scant belongings, push carts bulging with knickknacks, whole families huddled together on horse-drawn vehicles—such was the procession of miserable humanity coming toward us.

Shortly before reaching the border we saw a stockade-like affair at Gauentag with barbed wire around it and a big barn at one end. Some 1,100 captured Poles, it developed, had been assembled here the night before from various parts of the fighting area, and during our stay were marched off in groups of about 200 to nearby railway stations from which they will be transported to internment camps.

Ukrainians Happy

For the most part they were exceedingly badly clad. One group of 50 suddenly burst into song and when an interpreter asked who they were, they were said to have replied that they were Ukrainians and happy to be captured. There was a sprinkling of men in civilian clothes, five women and about a dozen boys in their teens among the prisoners.

All these civilians were arrested on the charge of sniping.

"Polish women," an officer said, "fight like tigers."

Shortly before arriving at our destination we reached a desolate town, evidently with brick factories as a chief industry. Buildings along the main road were shambles and the kilns were shot to pieces.

The German officer attached to me explained that two days previously, after the main part of the German army already had marched beyond Czestochowa and while the rear guard was being brought up, civilians of this town of Grazsyn suddenly opened fire from their homes, killing some officers and men.

A skirmish ensued, he said, in the course of which the houses and factories were demolished.

Panama Calls Peace Parley Of Americas

Normal Trade Relations, Prevention of Financial Upsets to Be Discussed

With the blessing of the United States Government, the Republic of Panama issued invitations last night to all the American republics to attend a conference designed to preserve peace in the Western Hemisphere, maintain normal trade and prevent financial disturbances on this continent as a result of Europe's war.

It was learned at the State Department that the Panamanian government was sending out the invitations in the name of itself, the United States, Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Peru, Colombia, Cuba and Mexico.

The State Department disclosed that a number of South American governments had suggested that there should be some consultation in line with the declaration of Pan-American solidarity which was approved by the international conference at Lima, Peru, last year.

It was decided, however, to wait until an actual declaration of war before arranging such a consultation.

Several of the American republics decided to ask Panama to send out the invitations.

Emphasis was placed in well-informed circles here upon the fact that the conference was not likely to consider military and naval matters.

Instead it was suggested, views would be exchanged as to the best means of preserving peace on this continent, the steps which different governments may be planning to take in an effort to preserve neutrality, and what measures could be taken to preserve normal trade. Steps to see that other interests are not prejudiced also would be considered, it was said, and ways would be sought of preventing economic and financial disturbances detrimental to inter-American relations.

The date for the conference was not disclosed, but it was reported that some countries had suggested late this month.

In the declaration of pan-American solidarity which was adopted at the Lima conference, the American republics affirmed their intention to collaborate in maintaining pan-American principles. They also agreed to defend these principles against all foreign intervention or activity that might threaten them.

$50,000 Cabled U. S. Survivors Of Athenia

The American Red Cross yesterday sent $50,000 by cable to Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy as a relief fund for injured or needy among American survivors of the torpedoed liner S. S. Athenia.

The Red Cross funds were sent to the American Embassy through the State Department after London reports stated that an undetermined number of Americans among the 1,030 survivors who were landed yesterday at Greenock, Scotland, are in need of immediate assistance. There were 311 Americans aboard the ship.

The State Department instructed Kennedy to act as agent for the Red Cross in distributing relief.

The Red Cross also conferred with the National Travelers Aid Association to formulate a joint system of assistance in port cities to American refugees rushing back.

The Travelers Aid Society of Washington has been directed by national headquarters to stand by to help Americans returning here who may be destitute or facing repatriation difficulties, Mrs. Margaret Ford, executive of the local agency, reported.

The National Travelers Aid headquarters pointed out that many Americans are returning through loans arranged by the State Department, but will be left without resources on reaching American ports.

The Red Cross and State Department agents in port cities will instruct such refugees to make contact with Travelers Aid agencies on landing. They will be taken care of by a locally developed system.

Warsaw Seems Doomed to Fall

Warsaw, but a glance at the map is not too reassuring.

There may be a stubborn defense of the capital.

A few American correspondents are going to wait around a bit and see. There are about a dozen of us—with plans for evacuating as well laid as possible.

Everywhere men, women and children were to be seen packing their most treasured belongings.

Trains leaving Warsaw were jammed. Many persons sat on hastily packed bundles in the aisles, unable to obtain seats. Roads leading from the city were choked with traffic of all kinds. Many had no idea where they were heading.

The full flight from Warsaw was not yet underway, however, because no general evacuation order has been issued by the government.

But best-informed persons and those of the upper ranks were leaving.

There were many who remained in Warsaw in a belief that their position was secure and that the enemy would be thrown back before it could come within striking distance of the city.

Raid Sirens Shriek

Despite the flight of families, the streets presented a more of less normal aspect. Couples carrying gas masks strolled along the sidewalks and chatted at cafes.

Now and then there were little bursts of laughter.

The frequent shrieks of the air-raid-alarm sirens chased the people indoors, but they emerged calmly and resumed whatever they had been doing when the "all clear" signal came.

It seemed as though the people of Warsaw might have been under siege from the skies for five years instead of five days.

(German war communiques tonight reported that Nazi armies were closing in upon Warsaw from three sides and were less than 50 miles away on the north and about 70 miles on the south. On the north the Germans claimed the capture of Przasnbysz. On the south the Germans were reported to have driven to Kamiens (Kamienna) on the main railroad line to Krakow.)

Military headquarters in an official communique declarde effective Polish counter-attacks took place against the German mechanized troops in South Poland near Gieradz. In this action, the Poles claimed to have captured a large number of tanks and military trucks.

A number of prisoners was taken in this fighting, the communique stated. While the actual number of prisoners captured was not revealed, the communique declared "the number is understood to be considerable."

One of the famous Polish cavalry brigades claimed to have penetrated East Prussia, seizing the towns of Karhein and Kowahlen, where one German officer and 30 soldiers were captured.

The Germans retreated in disorder before the mounted advance, it was claimed.

'Chute Soldiers Dropped

Further attempts on the part of the Germans to land soldiers with parachutes behind the Polish lines was reported tonight in an official statement.

(It was believed that if the Polish government left Warsaw it might go southeast to Lublin, 95 miles away toward the Rumanian frontier, to avoid being trapped with no avenue of escape to a friendly nation. Beyond Lublin and still closer to the Rumanian border is the large city of Lwow).

At 8:45 a. m. today the Germans resumed their air raiding, following the first attack with a second 25 minutes later in which 11 Heinkel bombers flying high—about 15,000 feet—bombed the same suburbs subjected to two furious raids Monday.

Fire Bombs Used

Two fires set by incendiary bombs in two heavy air raids late Monday burned all night in the suburbs and parts of the city were still in near-panic when the morning raids started. Firemen worked alongside rescue crews digging for dead and injured.

Four workers' apartment buildings were struck and set on fire and many tenants killed Monday night.

400,000 Swiss Defend Borders

Basle, Switzerland, Sept. 5 (AP).—Four hundred thousand Swiss troops took defense positions today along the frontiers of France and Germany to block attempts of either warring nation to use Switzerland as a detour around the Maginot and Siegfried lines.

Soldiers patroled railroad stations, tunnels and bridges. All incoming roads, where spikes have been placed in the way of tanks of a possible invader, also are being watched.

The government decreed no exports of foodstuffs, gasoline, metals, textiles and vehicles without special authorization.

Greek Crew Strikes At Seattle to Keep Out of War Zone

Seattle, Sept. 5 (AP).—The crew aboard the Greek tramp freighter Themoni, faced with the prospect of war hazards while transporting wheat to England, went on strike today.

E. Xanthopulos, spokesman for the 26 crew members, said the men feared the ship might be torpedoed and "we don't want to meet the fate of innocent bystanders."

Being aliens, the crew men will not be permitted under immigration laws to leave the ship for an indefinite stay here.

"Find us a freighting job on a good safe ocean where there are no submarines and we'll be perfectly willing to go to sea again," their spokesman said.

War Advisory Council Named By Morgenthau

Bankers and Economists To Handle Problems From Strife Abroad

By Felix Cotten.

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau announced yesterday the appointment of a war-time advisory council of six bankers and economists to help him handle banking and monetary problems arising as a result of the war.

He is calling back to the Treasury, he revealed, three men who have served as his advisers before. They are Tom K. Smith, president of the Boatmen's National Bank of St. Louis; W. R. Burgess, vice chairman of the National City Bank of New York, and Earle Baillie, a member of the Wall Street firm of J. and W. Seligman & Co., and chairman of the Tri-Continental Corporation and associated companies.

In addition, he said, he is drafting three of the "keenest" economists in the country to supply him with technical information on monetary and market problems. The economists are expected to report here tomorrow, and their names will be revealed at that time.

On Per Diem Basis

Offices in the Treasury Building will be assigned to all six, Morgenthau said. They will serve for an indefinite period without salary, but will receive per diem expenses, which for non-salaried experts runs up to a maximum of $25 per day.

Smith, a former president of the American Bankers Association, "will look after national, State and savings banks," Morgenthau explained. Burgess, formerly a vice president of the New York Federal Reserve Bank and manager of the Reserve System's open market account, will handle questions relating to Government financing. Baille's job will be to keep tab on movement of foreign money in and out of the country.

Other developments bearing on Administration war preparations were:

The Commerce Department, it was learned, is considering calling a conference of business leaders to discuss plans for expanding trade with Latin America. The slack, due to the war, in sales to Latin America by Nazi Germany is receiving the department's special attention.

Price Control Studied

The Justice Department, in cooperation with the War Resources Board and other departments, studied possible price control measures as a means of curbing profiteering. Several days may elapse, it was indicated, before definite proposals begin to take form.

Creation of the advisory council was announced by Morgenthau at a special press conference. Selection of Smith, Burgess and Baillie, he declared, "should be very reassuring to business, since these men are among the ablest in the country in their particular fields." Moreover, he declared, "they already know the Government and its problems."

Smith was special adviser to Morgenthau on banking questions in 1933 and 1934. Burgess, as manager of the reserve system's open market account, was long a key man in framing Treasury financing plans and in Government bond market support operations. Baille was adviser to Morgenthau on fiscal matters for a short time in 1933 and 1934.

U. S. Bond Stability an Aim

The three men came to Washington by plane yesterday and met secretly with Morgenthau.

A major problem facing the Treasury and Federal Reserve Board is the stability of the Government bond market. Prices of Government and other high grade bonds have weakened in recent days as market trading has shifted, under war-time speculative stimulus, to stocks.

Morgenthau revealed that, in view of the situation, the Treasury would not attempt to refund on September 15 the $626,000,000 of 1% per cent notes maturing on December 15.

He commented that "in view of what is going on in the world, the Government bond market has behaved beautifully."

Smith will deal directly with bankers, answering their questions and generally "acting as a doctor to keep the patient well," Morgenthau declared. The reason the council is being formed, he said, is that he and John W. Hanes, Undersecretary, "simply can't do it all."

He said appointment of the council was "all arranged three months ago" when interested Government agencies met to work out a program to cushion National economy against the shock if war came.

Administration economists, at the request of the War Resources Board, it was learned, are watching commodity price trends as a means of preparing for the general "crack down" on profiteering. Data is being gathered by experts in the Labor and Agriculture departments and the Reserve Board.

Germany Facing American Athenia Claims for Millions

By International News Service

With the wartime sinking of the Lusitania as a precedent, Americans aboard the English liner Athenia, sunk off the Irish coast, may be able to establish claims for millions in damages against Germany, State Department legal advisers said yesterday.

If it can be proved the Athenia was sunk by a German torpedo, as charged by the vessel's captain and several other of the survivors landed from rescue vessels yesterday, the Reich may be called upon to pay millions to American victims or their survivors.

American claims against Germany as a result of the sinking of the Lusitania in 1915, in which 128 Americans were killed, cost the German government approximately $3,500,000. Germany, in the sinking of the Lusitania, admitted the vessel had been torpedoed by a submarine, recognized its liability, and agreed to a mixed claims commission to adjust damages.

British Drop More Leaflets; Sink 3 Nazi Ships; Africans Oust Premier, Reject Neutrality

Associated Press Wirephoto from Paramount News.

Ignorance of war's horrors is a blessing for this tiny invalid who fears only for the safety of her dollbaby. The little girl was one of many patients taken out of London hospitals and moved from the dangers of air-raids into the safety of the English countryside. She clutches dollie firmly as she waits in a stretcher on the sidewalk for attendants to carry her away

Danish fishing boat and a Greek merchant ship.

British warplanes laid down another barrage of propaganda leaflets over Germany yesterday.

The ministry of information discloses that a second flight of British planes was made over German territory to tell the German people that the war is not against them but against their Nazi leadership. Not a single German plane tried to interfere, the British said.

The planes flew last night over the Ruhr district, known for its coal and iron mines and heavy industries.

It was stated here that the German ship Carl Fritzen had been sunk but its crew saved. Previously the sinking Sunday of the German ship Olinda off the coast of Uruguay was reported, both vessels going down under the guns of British cruisers.

Identity of the third German ship sunk was not disclosed.

Cunard Steamer Sunk

The Cunard Line announced that its steamer Bosnia had been sunk by a submarine and 23 of her crew rescued by a Norwegian tanker. One crew member was lost.

The 2,407-ton Bosnia went down 100 miles off the Scottish coast.

One death was reported, that of a fireman named Woods.

The Bosnia was set ablaze by gunfire and then torpedoed, the company announced.

The Carl Fritzen, of 659 tons gross and owned by J. Fritzen & Sons, was bound from Scheldam, the Netherlands, for Buenos Aires.

Requisitioning of stocks of imported canned meats under food defense plans.

Limiting to £25 (about $100) the amount of foreign exchange a traveler may take out of the country.

Fixing of prices for the sale of all categories of fat cattle, sheep and pigs for slaughter.

Africa Kills Neutrality

The House of Commons passed on a third reading a "national registration bill" under which a register will be compiled of up-to-date manpower statistics to assist in the national service recruitment.

Control of employment was introduced to prevent a shortage of labor in essential industries, prohibiting workers from taking up new employment without consent of the labor ministry and by other plans of control.

The temper of the Dominions was strikingly shown in South Africa when the South African Assembly tabled a neutrality motion by Gen. J. B. M. Hertzog, prime minister, forcing his resignation.

Gen. Jan Christian Smuts, of World War fame, minister of justice and deputy prime minister, began formation of a new government which it was reported would declare martial law today.

Canada Adopts Controls

Hertzog's motion was defeated 80 to 57 and Smuts' program for severance of relations with Germany and continued co-operation with Britain was approved by the same division. Parliament will be prorogued tomorrow.

The ministry of information tonight issued a statement of appreciation of what dominion support means to Britain. Reviewing preparedness of the dominions, the statement said "vast strides have been made in production of warlike stores of all kinds and dominion forces are today almost as well equipped as our own."

At the same time adoption by Canada of control measures similar to those already in effect in Britain was announced tonight. A price and trade board has been empowered to check any attempts at profiteering in food, fuel and other necessities.

Three cheers for the King sounded in the New Zealand House of Representatives after Parliament had passed unanimously a resolution approving New Zealand's declaration of war against Germany.

Eden Lauds Dominions

Anthony Eden, new secretary for dominions, sent a message of greeting and co-operation to the governments of Australia, Canada, New Zealand, South Africa and Ireland today and Malcolm MacDonald, secretary of state for the colonies, messaged them saying:

"Unhappily the work of the peacemakers has been finally thwarted. Our knowledge of the feelings of sixty millions of our fellow citizens in colonial territory has sustained us in Great Britain in our efforts for peace and steeled us in our preparations for war."

Sir Neville Henderson, British ambassador to Germany, and his staff reached Rotterdam last night after being delayed in Germany awaiting arrival of the German charge d'affaires Dr. Theodore Kordt from London.

Members of the staff said they had been well treated although they were kept under very close supervision.

President Lebrun, of France, messaged King George that the British and French people would be "invincible" in resisting "one of the most hateful acts of aggression recorded in history."

Sellers Hold Scrap Iron For War Price

Junk Dealers Report Lead and Copper Up $4 and $5 Per Ton

Anticipating a rise in scrap iron and other "war metals," many suppliers of Washington junk yards are refusing to sell, in the belief they will get better prices if they wait a week or so, it was learned yesterday.

Despite its unprepossessing name, junk is an important war commodity and its importance is rising steadily, as measured in terms of demand and price.

"Lead jumped $4 a ton today and copper is up $5 a ton," said Samuel M. Silbey, manager of Berg Bros. Co. "We anticipate a rise in scrap iron and so do some of our customers, apparently, because just today three of them said they preferred to keep their scrap for a while, figuring they'll get more for it later."

Samuel Block, manager of the Georgetown Junk Co., had the same story—customers suddenly deciding to hold their iron in anticipation of higher prices.

"It will be a different story, however, if an embargo is placed upon war metals as well as arms and munitions," Block declared. "If you can't ship the stuff, no matter how badly it is needed over there, the price will drop.

Silbey said that while there are no restrictions on the export of scrap metal at the present time, he is doubtful that a certain scrap-laden ship will sail for England Sunday as scheduled.

"She's now being loaded in Baltimore," he asserted, "but I wouldn't be surprised if the ship doesn't sail, the risk being what it is on the other side of the Atlantic. At any rate, it's mostly cash and carry now. Cargoes must be paid for before they put to sea."

Silbey and J. R. Selis, of the Federal Junk Co., pointed out that London is now the world's biggest junk market. Until a few months ago Japan was this country's No. 1 scrap iron customer, but today it's England.

A Wise Precaution

Drastic restrictions upon Americans wishing to travel in Europe were foreshadowed by President Roosevelt's radio address on Sunday night. He gave assurance that "every effort of your Government" will be directed toward keeping the United States out of the European war. It follows logically that no citizen should be permitted, without compelling reason, to jeopardize his safety in a way that might raise an issue between the United States and any belligerent.

The loss of life among Americans traversing the Atlantic during the World War was undoubtedly a factor in the decision of our Government to enter that conflict. It is not to be supposed that such traffic can be entirely cut off. But in the interests of individual citizens, as well as the Nation, that traffic should be reduced to a minimum. The Department of State has shown good judgment in restricting the issuance of passports—or use of existing ones—to those relatively few persons who will be able to show "an imperative necessity for traveling in Europe."

This action is entirely in line with the endeavors of several Government agencies to facilitate the repatriation of American citizens now in belligerent countries. A definite policy is thus beginning to take shape. By evacuating Americans from the war zone, and preventing others from entering that area without imperative cause, the Administration doubtless hopes to avoid irritating incidents that would tend to inflame public opinion.

Ultimately the question of whether this country can maintain a neutral position will be decided on grounds of basic national interests. That decision will depend in large part upon the development of the war and further clarification of our relations to it. Certainly the answer to this vital question should not be influenced by thoughtless action on the part of individual citizens who are inclined recklessly to jeopardize their own safety.

Every reasonable step which the Administration can take to insulate our own people from the shock and dangers of war will help to concentrate attention upon the larger issues involved. The immediate concern, of course, is the safety of our own citizens. But every move toward that end should also help us to make a more objective decision as to how our fundamental national interest may best be protected.

Ghosts At Haverford

It is with more than a little anguish in their hearts that Americans will see the Davis Cup depart next week on its long journey. And yet the large gallery watching the decisive Quist-Riggs match was not hoping for any other outcome. No one would deny that the Australians deserve to take the famous trophy with them.

Heavy favorites from the beginning to face and beat the United States, the men from down under at first failed to live up to expectations. A hard-hitting American team surpassed all but its coach's fondest expectations, to take a 2-0 lead. Into many hearts there crept the hope that this set-back for the Australians was a good omen. Although there was nothing but sympathy for the men who were playing tennis with the gloom of war hanging over them, certain eerie analogies were thus, for a time, dispelled.

The challenge round series of 1914 was played at Pittsburgh, with the usual country club background and in an atmosphere strongly flavored with wealth, security and good living. On the day of the finals reports had come that across the ocean the greatest armies of history had joined in fearful combat. In that time and in that atmosphere it was impossible to realize that many a battlefield was to be carpeted with corpses before the Davis Cup would again change hands. Yet of the two Australian victors of 1914 one was destined to die a few months later at Gallipoli, the other to fight and suffer through four years.

This year Pennsylvania was again the scene of the challenge round series. Again the atmosphere was redolent of luxury; less so perhaps of security. Again came reports of great empires convulsed by war. But this time there was neither remoteness nor unreality about the news. Rather it was the match itself, so unimportant in its innocence, that may have seemed unreal.

Yet again, as 25 years ago, the Australians turned defeat into victory. Again the thunderous applause will give way to the more deafening and deadly roar of guns. Probably their success means nothing except that the better team overcame the terrible impact of evil news to go ahead with the business at hand. But few reporters or spectators present could content themselves with this thought. In a world already weighted down with emotion and sorrow, such an incredible repetition of history cast an ominous shadow.

American Neutrality

Two separate documents issued by President Roosevelt yesterday proclaimed the neutrality of the United States in the war now raging in Europe.

The first seeks to implement the duties which, under international law, devolve on neutral nations in their relations with belligerents. It specifies the kind of actions which, as long as the war lasts and as long as the United States remains neutral, are forbidden to citizens of this country and all others residing here.

For instance, the proclamation prohibits the recruiting by belligerents or their agents of individuals to serve in the armed forces of any of the warring nations. It also prohibits the "enlisting or entering into the services of a belligerent as a soldier, or as a marine, or seaman on board of any ship of war, letter of marque, or privateer."

The same proclamation also lays down in great detail what the armed vessels of belligerents are to be permitted to do and what they are barred from doing while in the harbors of the United States, the nature and extent of the supplies they may purchase here, the length of their stay, etc.

This proclamation follows a time-honored precedent. It differs only slightly in language and substance from that issued by President Wilson at the time of the outbreak of the World War a quarter of a century ago. There will be no differences of opinions among Americans as to the wisdom of its terms.

The second proclamation issued by President Roosevelt was mandatory upon him. That mandate came, not from the dictates of international law, but as a result of the provisions of an act of Congress passed two years ago to meet such an emergency as that which faces the Nation today.

The neutrality act makes it unlawful, once the President has found a state of war to exist, as he has now done, to "export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, arms, ammunitions and implements of war," to any belligerent nation. It also prohibits the purchase of bonds, securities and other obligations of belligerents and the making of any loans or the extension of any credit to belligerents. The President may at his discretion, however, exempt ordinary commercial credits or short-term obligations from the operations of this act.

The law also prohibits travel on the vessels of belligerent states, except for a period of 90 days after war has broken out, presumably to provide time for Americans to return home on any ships available to them. It bans the arming of American merchant ships. And it lays down rules for the licensing of munitions sales by Americans to other than belligerents.

Most of these provisions are noncontroversial. They arouse no differences of opinion. Even if the law is modified most of these regulations are certain to be retained.

The crucial provision and the one which has aroused the greatest controversy is that relating to the mandatory embargo on arms, munitions and implements of war to belligerents. The inclusion of this clause gave undoubted encouragement to the aggressors at the time the law was enacted. Its implementation at this time means, in effect, that we handicap the allies in their fight with Germany. Of particular importance is the fact that the allies will now be unable to procure even the airplanes they ordered here and which have been awaiting delivery.

The allies are not only in need of the arms, munitions and implements of war we are able to supply but because they possess the requisite sea power they are in a position to transport them across the Atlantic. Germany does not need our munitions and, lacking sea power, is moreover cut off from the American market.

In effect, therefore, the neutrality law which the President has put into force, helps Germany by denying the allies an advantage they might reasonably expect to obtain. Is this the kind of neutrality the American people want?

In a statement issued at Cleveland, Senator Robert A. Taft asserted that he favored a special session of Congress for repeal of the mandatory embargo on arms and implements of war. "It seems to me," he said, "that there is nothing unneutral about supplying arms to any nation which can buy them, just as we have throughout our country's history."

Mr. Taft's point of view will find a warm echo in many sections of the population. And the longer the action he recommends is delayed the more we place Germany at an advantage and Great Britain and France at a disadvantage in a war which the overwhelming majority of Americans believe was Hitler's doing.

Propaganda Offensive

Modern wars are not fought with arms alone. They are fought with all the material and spiritual resources of the belligerent nations. Morale is no less important than munitions.

It was undoubtedly the recognition of this vital fact that led the British to begin their war on Germany with an air raid whose purpose was not to destroy German lives but to capture German minds and hearts. Instead of letting loose death-dealing bombs over German cities, the British planes, on this initial raid, dropped millions of leaflets. Printed in German, these leaflets stated that the war was wholly of Hitler's making and that Great Britain is prepared to "make peace with any German government which is sincerely peaceful."

Concurrently, over the British radio, a message by Premier Chamberlain was broadcast to the German people. This message, repeated at intervals throughout the day, pointed out that Hitler has consistently violated solemn pledges. In effect, the message over the radio, like the propaganda via the leaflets, urged the German people to rebel against their present rulers and by changing the regime make the restoration of peace possible.

Thus the propaganda offensive is on. It will undoubtedly grow in magnitude as the war progresses. And the attempt to destroy the morale of the enemy will certainly not be confined to one side.

The Nazi government, for its part, is an old hand at the propaganda game. It will use every trick it has learned during the past six years to persuade the German people of the rightness of their cause, to wage a counter-offensive against foreign propaganda that may penetrate German lines and to carry this particular type of war to the enemy.

In this struggle for the minds of men, Germany is handicapped by the circumstance that its case is so highly vulnerable. The outside world knows only too well the sequence of events leading up to the outbreak of the war and Hitler's primary responsibility for the tragedy into which the world is plunged. For that reason Nazi propaganda is likely to prove ineffective in democratic countries. It is in Germany, where the people are ignorant as to the events leading up to the war, that propaganda should have telling effect.

To prevent the viewpoints of enemy powers and neutrals from reaching the German people a decree has been issued confiscating all radios capable of distance reception, making listening to foreign broadcasts a crime and repetition of what is heard over these broadcasts a capital offense in some instances. But the effect of these drastic measures on intelligent Germans may be only to increase their doubts and alarms over Hitler's course of action.

A Costly Strike

Probably no one will attempt to estimate the cost of the sand and gravel workers' strike which came to an end yesterday. But losses sustained by the Smoot Sand & Gravel Co. and its employes are unquestionably substantial. To these must be added enormous sums that would have been earned by approximately 5,000 men not directly involved in the dispute, except for their enforced idleness. Losses suffered by the Government because of the delay of its building program must also be counted in.

According to John B. Coyne, president of the A. F. of L.'s building and construction trades department, the strikers returned to work "to avoid further embarrassment to the building industry." So far as the public is informed, no such concern for the welfare of the building industry was felt by the company. Any real consideration of the public interest would have prompted the company to accept the compromise offered last week by the Labor Department's Conciliation Service.

It should be noted, too, that the union's change of heart came very late in the day. After being on strike for three weeks, the workers are reported to have accepted the terms which they turned down two weeks ago when suggested by the Conciliation Service. In that two-week interval many thousands of dollars have been lost to them and other employes in the construction industry here.

Settlement of the chief differences which led to the strike apparently remains to be effected. In other words, the situation appears to be about what it was when the strike began. If any gains can be recorded, they are minor. Only the losses mount up to a substantial figure. Both sides will have to review the incident in terms of regret.

You can cast reflections upon a man's ancestors, poke fun at his hobbies, laugh at his bay window or bald head, and kick his dog around, and still obtain his forgiveness—but he'll hate you for life if you tell him he has no sense of humor.

Another reason why money is so popular is because it will get you in almost anywhere and get you out of almost anything.

In ever so many cases a man spends years finding the right girl and then gets the wrong answer.

Reactions To The War

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The splendid, front-page editorial on neutrality in your issue of September 2—two days before the President broadcast his plea for "true neutrality"—crystallizes the feelings of millions of Americans who cherish Anglo-Saxon freedom; for, in your own words, "the struggle of our civilization is against the theory of dictatorships." And Mr. Roosevelt aptly stated: "Even a neutral cannot be asked to close his mind or his conscience."

At long last England and France have indicted Hitler, and his accomplice Stalin, before the bar of world opinion as the arch foes of the democratic way of life. The patience of Job displayed by Mr. Chamberlain had its limit; but his ill-starred efforts to preserve the peace have not been vain.

Poland, the only remaining isle of democracy between Germany and Russia, deserves the rest of the democracies' heartfelt praise for her courageous stand. Poland dared say "No!" when "Yes" might have saved the lives of her gallant sons, but would have destroyed their souls forever.

I believe with you that it is of the utmost concern to us whether Britain and France survive this struggle or not. If they go down, then the liberties we have known on these shores for a century and a half are plainly illusory. If Hitler and his cohorts encompass Europe with their brand of ethos, the barbaric subjugation of all mankind will follow.

Naturally, at present, it is the fervent wish of the President to preserve the neutrality of the United States indeed, but future circumstances over which he can have no control may force this country to recede from such a position, and we may again find ourselves fighting not only for the freedom of the seas, especially if Germany wars on neutral shipping, but also in our new role as titular chief democratic state.

Germany's View

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Can neutrality be saved? Perhaps, but not by such writings as the all - black - on - the - one - side - all-white-on-the-other first paragraph of your recent front-page editorial.

There may be no question as to who is the aggressor in this war; but unfortunately that term has come always to carry the connotation of being in the wrong (so that every opponent of the status quo would be in the wrong), and there is a great deal of wrong to be found on both sides, not only in the Versailles treaty, but in more recent events. Poland's refusal to even consider yielding Danzig, which should unquestionably have returned to Germany, blocked every start at negotiations. The unqualified support of Great Britain made the Poles feel so cocky that their attitude allowed of no peaceable solution (given Germany's attitude on the matter). This carte blanche support on Britain's part will probably rank among the great mistakes of history beside Germany's blank check to Austria-Hungary on the eve of the first World War.

At present the great majority of the people see both sides of the question. There is by no means the definite and fierce fixation of sympathies that you assume—as yet. But there soon will be unless the Fourth Estate recognizes its responsibility. As things are now, the progress of the war will probably be so reported that it can be interpreted only from one viewpoint—that Germany is wrong and Poland is right.

And at length any argument over war guilt will sound like quibbling with reports of the havoc wrought in Poland pouring in. And we will start to sell arms to the "democracies" (people will forget Poland is a Fascist dictatorship), and more ships carrying American citizens will be sunk, and so on and on and on. You know the rest.

If this is to be avoided, the newspapers must continually point out, in editorials and headlines, the German view as well as the Polish-British-French; they should even emphasize it, for the Nation's sympathies will take care of their seeing the anti-German view.

From A Pacifist

To The Editor of The Post—Sir:—Twenty-five years ago Britons were called upon to slaughter Germans in defense of freedom, and Germans to slaughter Britons in order to save their country from a ring of enemies. The untruth that inspired the respective battle-cries did not show its face until it had claimed the bodies of ten million victims, and as it remains unknown to great masses of those proposed to be thrown to Moloch now, the same chants are being raised to the same god today.

Twenty years ago the more accomplished butchers of their fellowmen freely chose by huge majorities to squeeze their broken foe "till the pips squeaked." In pursuance of that enlightened policy Germany was stripped of most of her means of life at home and abroad, and reparations on an admittedly fantastic scale was extorted by a worse atrocity than any perpetrated on either side in the heat of conflict—the slow starvation of men, women and little children to death by blockade.

The British progressive press of those days warned the nation of where that policy must end, yet now that its own prophecies are being fulfilled before our eyes, the only lead it has to give us is in the direction of an unimaginably hideous repetition of the former holocaust. In spite of its recent failure to face up to the attack of the conscriptionists, some of us still clung to the hope that it would risk its popularity by making a stand for reason and peace at this last moment of fatality.

Pacifists expected the Stalin somersault, and have said so publicly for a year past. His desire and aim have been to see the democracies and the Nazi-Fascists fighting each other "a l'outrance," and so making a Europe fit for bolshevism to flourish in. Those may take a hand in such murderous folly who know no better, but I am one Briton who not only rejects it utterly, but pledges himself at whatever cost to hamper the destroyers, regardless of nationality, by all pacific means that come to hand. And I trust that every good American will do the same.

European Affairs

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Much of the talk about peace, principally by Roosevelt and the Vatican, does not appeal to discerning people. It is very evident that neither Hitler nor Mussolini pay any attention to it. Where were these "peace" advocates when Ethiopia and republican Spain were fighting for freedom?

The people of the United States are not and should not be concerned with European affairs when war is the issue. We have quite enough here at home to take up our attention. Although proclaiming peace and democracy, subversive influences are constantly at work to undermine our free institutions.

The great body of the American people have had enough of fighting in Europe. Let us now attend to our own affairs.

Thinking And Doing

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Judging from published accounts, life in some European concentration camps is rather similar to life in Satan's region. Such reading gives one the impression that a despot considers it perfectly all right to inflict atrocities on his own people. And their countrymen outside these camps seem to be willing slaves, thinking a lot but saying and doing nothing about it.

In this great free North America we cannot imagine ourselves victims of such serfdom, can we? What are we doing to stop its growth in Europe and its inevitable repercussions on this side of the Atlantic? All human beings are God's people. Is it nothing to us that fellow-humans suffer? Can we be happy at their servility? There is a reason for their submission to intolerable conditions, but there is no reason for people on this continent to be indifferent.

War Propaganda

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: For two weeks a crisis has been growing more ominous hour by hour. Germany is making war on Poland.

To the interested American, who listens to his radio, it has already become apparent that the ether waves are to play an important role in this great war.

If the policies of the two opposing sides are to determine the outcome, it may be interesting to compare the propaganda technique of Germany with that of France, England and Poland.

For the past year and more Herr Hitler's speeches have been broadcast to the world, probably on the assumption by him and his coterie of advisers that Hitler is the greatest radio personality since Marconi invented the wireless. Germany's trump card in her war of propaganda is the voice of Hitler with its defiance, intolerance of every decent code, spreading crude statements and vicious attempts at deceit.

If Germany thinks the world is going to swallow this vindictive stream of evil pouring from the mind and mouth of its acknowledged leader, it gives the world little credit indeed.

There is, on the other hand, from the broadcasting stations of France, England and Poland, some deference to the intelligence of listeners. There appears to be for the most part a fairly earnest effort, if not to tell the whole truth, at least not to greatly distort that portion of it revealed. These broadcasts have the general effect of sharply casting into relief the quiet, measured tones of nations facing or about to face great hardships with a quiet, but unquenchable courage.

HARRY R. LEE.

No Jitters

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: Your September 2 front page editorial is merely a superfluous addition to the mass of proof that editors, no more than ordinary folk, are immune to jitters. Only 23 years ago, we started out on a crusade to make the world safe for democracy. At the expense of billions of dollars and many lives we helped to destroy the most of the so-called democracies, and to create more and more totalitarian states.

Now should we start on the war-path again, knowing, as we do, that to enter the war we must first give up all personal rights and property and become the helpless pawns of a dictator?

Buried Treasure

"HOW THAT man has the courage to go on living is beyond my comprehension," Freyling said one night in the Faculty Club, motioning toward the departing figure of Bowers, the modern language professor, whose drooping form had just gone through the door.

"He certainly doesn't seem to enjoy living," I observed. "He never speaks to anyone and if you say something to him he jumps as if he had been caught plotting to bomb the college."

"Quite," said Freyling. "He is the most morose person I know, but with good reason. That abstraction you note in him, that far-away look in his eyes, that grim diffidence to everything about him is caused by the most colossal circumstance of frustration I have ever heard about. It is coupled, furthermore, with a responsibility so vast and grave that a weaker character than Bowers' would long since have cracked under it."

The fact is (Freyling continued) in Bowers rests a responsibility as weighty as that which lay on the monasteries which kept the lamps of learning dimly flickering through the Dark Ages.

It all began when Bowers was an undergraduate at Oxford. He had scarcely reached 20, and shaving was still an enjoyable novelty rather than the torture with which the Caucasian male introduces each day in a life for which he is manifestly unfitted.

Thus it was that Bowers could sing at his work of mowing down the still soft and unresisting velvet nap on his youthful cheeks. But suddenly, one morning, he stopped his singing with a jerk. He realized that the words pouring through his lathered lips were like no other language that he had ever heard.

He sat down in a daze, the lather still on his cheeks, and tried to collect his thoughts. He remembered that he had been singing the same song for some days past. He recalled it perfectly. It appeared to be two verses of four lines each, unrhymed but with a definite rhythm.

Then he remembered. It was a nursery song out of his childhood, taught him by an old Georgian nurse employed by his family in Constantinople, where his father had been in the British consular service.

Very much interested, Bowers took the song to several of the professors at Oxford to find out what language he was singing. And a suspicion, which he arrived at intuitively, was confirmed. The professors were stumped. The whole language faculty of Oxford was called in—in vain. The library was searched—also in vain.

Bowers switched from the mathematics tripos to the study of philology. Years went by and the obsession to discover the tongue of this little double quatrain grew. It may be measured by the fact that Bowers, an Oxonian, took his problem to Cambridge, but with equally futile results. Then to the Sorbonne and the German universities. Everywhere the answer was the same.

By this time Bowers was enough of a language student to know that he was on the trail of something stupendous. He knew that the approximately 50 words came from a root hitherto undiscovered. They were neither Semitic, Indo-European, agglutinative, monosyllabic, Finno-Ugrian.

By this time Bowers was driven as if by a demon. He knew no rest. The urge to discover more about this language was irresistible.

He returned to Constantinople, in the hope of rediscovering his old nurse. Months of searching proved only that she had died. The single clew he could find was the name of the village in Georgia whence she came.

Then followed what is truly an heroic saga—Bowers' years of wandering through the Caucasus in search of his language, or at least the village where the language was spoken.

His discoveries in that curious land, where man is believed to have first sprung, and which at the same time, until Bowers' researches, was the world's greatest linguistic terra incognita, need no further discussion.

But you know, of course, Bowers' five monumental volumes on the languages of the Caucasus which established him as one of the two or three greatest living philologists. His conclusive proof that villages there have been absolutely cut off, in culture, language and intercourse from neighboring towns just over a mountain pass has practically revolutionized certain phases of modern ethnological theory.

This should have been enough for any man, but not Bowers. The nursery song whose source he hunted was totally unrelated to anything else he found in and on both sides of the Caucasus. He could not even find the village he sought.

At least, after many years in the area, he came across a community whose oldest inhabitants recalled that there was a settlement by the name he gave some 40 miles away at the fork of two rivers deep in the mountains.

Bowers has told me that his exultation knew no bounds at this news. Although it was evening, he set out on foot with a donkey carrying his notebook and pack toward the goal of his wanderings. He arrived there at sunset the next day.

Below him on a little plain, where his trained anthropologist's eye told him must have been the site of a village, there was a broad and deep layer of rubble. A raw yellow scar in the hill above showed where the landslide had started.

"For the mind of a scholar like Bowers," Freyling concluded, "there can never be any peace. He is still searching for some people whose language may have come from the same source as his nursery rhyme. He has tried the American Indians, the South Americans, Tibetans, Polynesians. He knows, in his heart, his search is hopeless. But he must go on. For a man who knows 50 words in a language whose radicals are unrelated to any other spoken or written tongue on the face of the globe is forever a bond slave to the god Research.

"For the only man in the world who knows a new language, the god does not even temper its mercilessness with the promise of hope. Bowers knows he can't win, but he dares not lose."

ALFRED FRIENDLY.

The Athenia Incident

By Ernest K. Lindley

Ordinary Prudence

WHAT SANK the Athenia is unknown in Washington as this is written. Several officials accepted instantly—almost eagerly—the bald, unsupported report of the British Admiralty that it was sunk without warning by a torpedo from a German submarine.

Investigation may prove that the Athenia was sunk by a torpedo and, furthermore, that this torpedo was fired by a German submarine. On the other hand, the cause of the disaster may never be established. Such clues as are found may point toward a mine or a submarine of some other nationality. Or they may leave the whole matter a complete mystery.

Ordinary prudence prohibits jumping to conclusions. Like other belligerents in this war, the British are engaged in a life-and-death struggle. In times of peril they are adroit in cashing in on the reputation for veracity which they earn in times of peace.

British Desire U. S. Early Entry

THE BRITISH, obviously, will make an unremitting effort to draw us into full participation in this war. Our entry would be a guarantee of victory for them. Our early entry might save them the loss of millions of lives and the destruction or expenditure of billions of dollars' worth of property. They know as well as we do that the submarine controversy was the route over which we traveled into the war in 1917. They will do their utmost to draw us along the same route again. They would be disloyal to their own supreme national and imperial interests if they did not make this effort with every resource at their command.

Thus before one iota of proof had been made public that the Athenia was sunk by a German torpedo, Winston Churchill and other British leaders—and the British press and the British airways—were unqualifiedly putting the blame on the Germans and hopefully recalling the Lusitania.

The Germans presumably are going to sink British ships. They may wage unrestricted submarine warfare, which means that neutral shipping will be unsafe in the submarine areas. It is hardly conceivable that, as a matter of policy, they would begin by sinking an outbound passenger ship carrying more than 300 American citizens. If the Athenia was torpedoed by a German submarine it was more likely due to the poor judgment of the submarine commander.

American Citizens Travel At Own Risk

ASSUME THAT the Athenia was sunk by a German submarine, acting either in accord with orders or in disregard of them. What then?

During the 1914-18 World War we tried to maintain the right of our citizens to travel in safety on the ships of belligerents. That was the central point of our submarine controversy with Germany. Until we severed diplomatic relations with Germany only one American ship had been sunk with the loss of American lives. In this instance three American lives were lost, one from heart failure.

Many informed and responsible people felt at the time that our policy with regard to the submarine was unsound. Some felt that it was not in accord with international law.

After a careful study of our policies during the World War, the Wilson policy with regard to travel by American citizens on the ships of belligerents was renounced by Congress. This renunciation was approved—apparently wholeheartedly—by the President and Secretary Hull.

The neutrality act of 1935 authorized the President to require that American citizens should travel only at their own risk on the ships of belligerent nations. The President put that into effect on October 5, 1935, barely 24 hours after Italy invaded Ethiopia.

Rules Prescribed For Foreign Travel

THE PRESENT neutrality act makes it a penal offense for any American citizen to travel on a vessel of a belligerent nation, except under such rules as the President may prescribe.

The present law (like the 1935 law) makes specific exception, however, for American citizens whose voyage was begun before the President found a state of war to exist. It also allows a 90-day period after the President's proclamation, during which American citizens may return to the United States on the vessels of belligerents.

The American citizens on the Athenia obviously were not there in violation of American law. However, all or most of them seem to have embarked after Germany invaded Poland. For days it had been evident that there was grave danger of a general war. It had been widely predicted that if general war occurred, the action on all sides would be swift and drastic. Would it not have been wise to caution American citizens against departing for home on the ships of prospective belligerents?

If our Government is satisfied that the Athenia was sunk by a German submarine, without warning and without provision for the safety of passengers, it can protest and take other steps. But it can't push the issue too far without running up against the plain intent of Congress that in this war we shall not attempt to maintain the right of American citizens to travel on the ships of belligerents.

Germany On The Eve Of War

By An American in Germany

Berlin, August (by mail).

GERMANY TODAY has two minds: the official one that writes the news, the radio speeches and the endless series of posters in public places, the other mind that only speaks its opinions behind shut doors and windows, or in hushed tones in the beech woodlands and heather-covered moors.

Today the official mind says that the nation is being encircled as in 1914 and that a cruel blockade is surely being prepared to starve the hard-working heroic nation that has risen again to fulfill its destiny of world leadership. The stress put on this point is a sign of the angry disillusionment on the part of the government at its inability to win England to its cause. Hence the stress on the things that will take all the comforts that the average German worker enjoys today.

Toward England the private mind is disposed to be tolerant. Most thoughtful people felt that it was Chamberlain rather than Hitler who saved Europe last year from war, and many no longer trust Hitler as a result of this close shave they feel was due to his dangerous policies. Some of my oldest friends, the parents of twin sons now in the Reichswehr doing their two years' service, showed me proudly a signed letter from Mr. Chamberlain thanking them for their letter of gratitude to him last September. Turning to me the father said, "I have lost all confidence in our own government. The only thing that will rid my fatherland of this party now in charge is a war."

BESIDES a sense of insecurity in the present government, there is also a fear that some new change in policy may provoke a conflict. Changes have been frequent and astonishing even to party officials. The whole attitude now toward England reverses the hope expressed in "Mein Kampf" for a permanent friendship with England.

The constant denial of any German activity in the Spanish civil war was followed last June by a magnificent reception to the boatloads of heroes who had been decorated for their part in the Franco victory. The one thing that seems constant in the program is the persecution of the Jews, although the thinking German throughout the entire country decried with shame the affair of last November to me, saying that here the party had brought out more openly expressed opposition to itself than by any other action.

BUT ONE of the most useful changes at present has been the new policy toward Poland. The ten-year treaty on non-aggression signed with the Poles in January 1934, was a surprise to most Germans who had been taught to regard them as an inferior people, to be looked down on as rather harmlessly inefficient.

So the present campaign by the official press, radio and through a flood of recently released pamphlets and books on the dangers of Poland, her "mediocre culture," her "barbaric people" and the need to round out the eastern frontiers of Germany has been rather like a return to the old stand by the government, except that the atrocity campaign reports sounded a little like the material released against the Czechs before the Munich affair last summer. People began to suspect a repetition of that scene.

Beside the Polish policy there has been the riddle of the exchange of population in the South Tyrol for the thoughtful German to worry about. Not a word of this negotiation was published in the press, but as every radio owner tries to get London at 10 p. m. for news each night and Strasbourg gives news in German, most of the thinking people were well aware that something very difficult to explain was happening to the German minority in Italy.

AND LAST of all was the riddle of the right-about-face contained in the recently announced Russian deal.

Officially no propaganda was more sedulously carried on than that against the Soviet government by National Socialist Germany. The entire foreign press in Berlin grew weary of hearing daily from Dr. Goebbels that the Western world had been saved from bolshevism by the leaders of the Third Reich. Radio reception was cut off in Berlin from the powerful Moscow sender early in 1933, and it has been a treasonable offense punishable by death to listen to broadcasting from Russia. But in spite of this barrage, thinking people realized that the 1922 Rapallo Treaty of friendship between the two countries had never lapsed.

The Reichswehr has always known the strategic importance of this policy and at a staff banquet only a few years ago, the leading toast was given by a general to the Russian army, "Our enemies of yesterday, our friends of today and our allies of tomorrow."

TO KEEP the loyalty of the average man through the maze of changing policies, the government has played up the fact that every German must have unswerving loyalty to his leaders, who in turn cannot fulfill their duties without this complete faith. Posters to this effect hang in garages and shops. Dangers of spying through apparently harmless questions by foreigners are pointed out on posters in underground station exits and postoffices. Directions for conduct during air raid drills end with the words, "You must do your duty like a soldier at the front. Remain true to our leader!"

And what do the Germans feel about the possibility of war? No German wants war outside of the desperate few I have mentioned. Under the apparent facade of content has crept a fear of impending attack from without or within.

The word went out on the eastern frontier that after the fifteenth of August when the harvest was supposed to be gathered, anything might happen. Mothers of the 40,000 students who were placed with peasants in East Prussia and other grain regions to help get the crops in, told me that they feared their boys would be forced into the army out there if anything happened. All German families living in Poland were sending their children back to German relatives early this summer.

Every order to conserve gasoline, save wood, eat less meat, was taken as a sign that Germany was girding herself for a real struggle. The official mind could ask no questions, so no explanations were forthcoming. This only heightened the suspicions of the reasoning people. Rain delayed the harvest and parents rejoiced that nature might hold up the leader's plans so that their sons might live a little longer. The potato crop was reported molding in some places due to the delays in harvesting it, and again mingled fear and thankfulness gripped the intelligent minds of Germany; fear of starvation, on the one hand, and, on the other, hope that the specter might stay the leader's hand.

I SAT the other day with a great industrialist on his shaded veranda overlooking the Rhine. He brought news that gasoline was to be rationed and that the harvest had been spoiled by rain in many places. His wife apologized for a meatless dinner—four butchers could not give her even soup bones. We talked quietly of the increasing international tension and my host said finally, "Our leader must know that one air attack on a huge city like this would throw our whole economic system out of gear. He has given us what most Germans look on as undreamed-of prosperity and if he gambles on war, he knows that he will not only ruin his people but himself. I do not think he will dare take such a chance."

EVERYONE has work now and can buy enough to eat for the needs of the average German family. Wages are still on the old 1932 basis, to be sure, with a fifth to a fourth going to taxes and party charges. Hours run from sixty to eighty a week. Prices for necessities such as bread, butter, eggs, flour, bacon and coffee, as well as for certain cheap cuts of meat, are all controlled, so that the average citizen has what he wants to eat.

This summer when fruit and vegetable prices rose in western Germany, where the population is working on the western fortifications and in the armament industries, the government set prices even for such common articles as lettuce and cabbage, in an effort to keep this set of key workers satisfied and balance off supply and demand.

But with the increasing pressure of a rising demand for all consumption goods and along with this, the lack of labor supply on the land as well as in the trades supplying clothing, furniture, and all luxury goods, the government is struggling hard to strike a balance and assure a contented population and keep up the Four Year Plan at the same time.

A further complication in the food supply is the government policy of storing vast quantities of staples for use in case of actual trouble. Last winter there was an acute coffee shortage and when complaints grew too loud and widespread, the officials suddenly released just enough to quiet the popular outcry. However, this storing has been largely responsible for the butter allowance for each person, for the scarcity of good flour of all types and for the insufficient meat supply. Housewives make out three menus some times before they go to market, so sure are they that some important item on one or another menu will be unobtainable.

ON THE RAILWAYS the traffic has risen 10 per cent above the peak year, 1929. Through trains are nearly always late, sometimes as much as 40 minutes to an hour, something simply unheard of before in Germany. Rolling stock is in poor condition. The result is that there has been an increase in accidents, some of them serious, also an event rarely known before on German railways.

In spite of all these apparent difficulties, the average German is content to take life as he finds it. A worker now making bombs after seven years of unemployment said to me, "My people are so busy eating and drinking that they do not want to look up and see what lies ahead." They are also supremely confident that the head of their government knows everything, that he has never let them down yet, and a laboring man put it, "He lives only for us. He will never bring on a war and ruin all the wonderful things he has given us. He will do what is right for his people."

Actors Defeat Coup

THE STAGEHANDS' RAID on the actors' corridor has been beaten back, and the lily-handed hams are triumphant in a strident interunion spat which might have closed every theater, movie house and studio in the country. Briefly, the stagehands tried to muscle into the actors' domain by issuing a charter to that great mass of gin mill performers, many of whom get by on gall in the modern version of the old-fashioned back room or dump, where the patrons are assumed to be too drunk to give a damn, or, if sober, too chinchy to deserve consideration.

Of these people, in general, it cannot be said that they are actors, for they rarely even pretend to present any sort of play, nor could the friendliest critic call them singers, for they confine their efforts to the nuzzling of an electrified tin can, mounted on a half-inch pipe, and, in the case of the males whining and of the females moaning about love, or, more correctly, lust.

The actors claimed them and their field of employment for their union, because the customers had drifted away from the theater to the dive during the long siege of prohibition. The actors held the dump, or dive, to be, in a broad manner of speaking, a place of entertainment, and persisted in their claim of jurisdiction, even knowing that they were invading in many cases a suburb of the underworld.

Stagehands Sought Control Of Actors

THE ACTORS jim crowed these performers in a special honky-tonk division of the stage union, and it was this division which the stagehands tried to grab in a blitzkieg stroke executed at a time when the actors were having a little trouble with the honky-tonk talent. The stagehands' further plan was then to decree that all the real actors of the stage and screen must join the honky-tonk union, under control of the stagehands.

After that the existing unions of stage and screen actors would fall away and the entire personnel of the American amusement business would be governed by the stagehands.

The actors were prepared to strike, hoping that this would bring before the public full information concerning the affairs of the stagehands' union and the effect of the union's conduct on the amusement industry in general. In the face of the defiance and in consideration, no doubt, of the fact that the Federal Department of Justice is now investigating the stagehands in Hollywood, the actors on Sunday night were able to announce that the stagehands' union had retreated to its own borders.

Actors Now Willing To Forgive, Forget

THE HANDS relinquished the honky-tonk union to the actors and waived all claims in the actors' autonomy, and there is now a disposition on the part of the actors to forgive and forget in the interests of union harmony. But that policy would seem to throw down the public, to which the actors were on the point of appealing for support against conditions, which, if they did not overspeak themselves, were criminal.

If the situation was no better than the actors alleged when they were appealing for aid and comfort, then the public has a continuing interest in the case, and the actors' obligation does not wash out at this point.

Only two weeks ago, so the A. P. reported, the Department of Justice filed documents in the Federal Court in Los Angeles, stating that the Government had been informed that the stagehands' union had attempted to obtain money in violation of the anti-racketeering act.

SOME OF THE UNION actors claim to have information which would seem to pertain to the Government's problem, and an abrupt decision to forget the whole thing would place union harmony above the public interest.

And, aside from any question of criminality, the actors, after all their complaints of hard times and their demands for Government funds to revive the American theater, would seem duty bound, as citizens, to tell the Government what they have said among themselves about the extent to which the rapacity and dictatorial arrogance of the stagehands are responsible for poverty among the actors.

On The Record

Propaganda In The Air

IT WOULD SEEM essential that while we are considering means of cushioning this country against the economic shock of war, and reconsidering whether the existing neutrality legislation is actually in the best interests of our neutrality, we should have a policy adopted regarding propaganda, and particularly regarding propaganda on the air.

The spoken word is probably far more inflammatory than the written word. The human voice is a more potent conveyor of emotion than is the printed page; it is less likely to appeal to reason; it is more capable of being misunderstood; from time immemorial it has been used to sway and control masses, and this possibility has been incalculably augmented by the radio and the power of reaching millions.

During the past fortnight a vast amount of time on the air has been given to broadcasting the news from Europe, and together with the news that comes from official bulletins and communiques and the reports of American foreign correspondents. We have listened day by day on short wave and on rebroadcastings of phonograph transcriptions, to the official propaganda of foreign governments.

Foreign Relays Are Questioned

THIS LAST, particularly, seems to me to be of very doubtful policy. It is technically impossible to prevent the American people from listening to the short-wave broadcasting directly from all countries, but I wonder whether it is in the public interest for any great networks to assist foreign governments by relaying their counsels to Americans so that they are available to every one with a radio.

Unless some general policy is adopted one network doing this will encourage other networks to do the same out of competition.

This war is a peculiar war—peculiar in many ways already, and bound to develop day-by-day surprises. But one of its most powerful weapons will be sound. This is the first war in history which the whole world can hear. In one country at least, so far, the war is being conducted by a revolutionary government which has an incredibly perfected technique of propaganda. This is Germany. The Nazi regime overthrew the German republic and captured the instruments of power inside Germany largely by an astute, ruthless, subtle and cynical platform and radio propaganda. Each of its separate campaigns—against Austria, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland and now against Britain and France—was preceded by a barrage of words over the air. That barrage now continues, both as an instrument of war and as an instrument of Nazi ideas.

Nazis Have Best Sending Station

IT HAPPENS that of all the warring nations Nazi Germany has the strongest sending station on the continent. Reports of the Warsaw broadcasting company are very difficult to hear and are transmitted by speakers with a bad English accent. The same is true for France. Germany, however, has an announcer whose English is perfect, and whose voice, transmitted from a phonograph record, is as clear as if he were speaking from the United States.

The German government itself is so aware of the power of the spoken word that immediately on the outbreak of the war it first prohibited listening to foreign broadcasts on pain of arrest, and decreed the death sentence for anyone who reported further what he might have heard. Fearing, apparently, that even this was inadequate, it then confiscated all short-wave sets.

The British government has done nothing to hinder its population from listening to any foreign broadcasts, believing that the die having been cast and Britain engaged in a life and death struggle, its people are immune. Furthermore, we are assured that there is no censorship of broadcasts from England by representatives of American broadcasting systems, except for reports about military operations which are, of course, forbidden to everybody. That is apparently true, but it may not remain so.

Seek To Influence Neutrality Policy

AND CERTAINLY the broadcasts of American correspondents from Berlin are not only censored but apparently partially ordered. I heard two broadcasts this week from American correspondents which were obviously transmitting very clearly what the German government wishes the rest of the world to know or think, but which in the most veiled way, in a manner explicable only to students of the German situation, attempted to convey certain other facts as clues to conditions there.

Is it really in the public interest that this should go on?

The German propaganda, unlike any other that I have heard, relates also to the reporting, often falsely, and always for propaganda reasons—of conditions in the United States itself. It is, of course, primarily designed, from this viewpoint, toward influencing our neutrality policy.

But do we wish to have it influenced by them, or by any one else except by ourselves?

American Networks Full of Propaganda

WHAT WOULD BE our policy if Russia in one way or another became directly involved in the war? Would we wish the propaganda of the Soviet government, which is also the center of the Communist international, distributed here, over the ether, by courtesy of American networks?

And, finally, in these extremely critical times when, from day to day, the most delicate decisions must be taken by our Government for our safety and security, do we want a free-for-all expression of the opinions of individuals every time we turn the dial?

Do we want to hear Gen. Johnson, presented as a military expert and presumably commenting on military affairs, make remarkable (and most inaccurate statements) about why we entered the last war?

What he said was immediately taken up by one country abroad and retransmited to the world as an expression of American opinion.

Or do we, for that matter, wish to hear Dorothy Thompson except as she confines herself to an attempted analysis of facts?

This columnist, who is seldom inhibited about the expression of convictions in the printed word, is aware that on the air she is exercising a brief monopoly of a certain space of time over major networks, and this, together with the extraordinary power of the spoken word, seems to her to justify the establishment of a clear policy.

I do not presume to recommend a policy, but I do suggest that one should be made.

Limited Summaries Of War News Urged

ALSO, IT WOULD seem to me that the reports of the war, which have interrupted all programs, might well be summarized into two or three reports a day. For one thing, I do not see how, in the long run, the present system can go on without damaging the press and bankrupting the broadcasting companies who must take the time away from advertisers.

But apart from that, the news is exciting, and since we have to keep our heads cool, it would seem wise to have our nerves racked less continually.

For this war began with, and will continue to be, a war of nerves, and unless we are extremely prudent we shall rapidly be drawn into this phase, at least, of the war.

Vision Institute Urges Inspection Of Drivers' Eyes

Periodic eye inspections for automobile drivers was recommended yesterday by the Better Vision Institute of New York City.

The institute reported that more than half of all Americans in their 40s have serious eye defects, while none of the States requires periodic checkups on drivers' eyes.

About half of the States have eye tests for applicants for driver's permits, but "none of the tests is very rigid," the institute said.

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Woman, 5 Feet 1 Inch, Writes She Lost 80 Pounds by Dieting

IF YOU THINK that you are just naturally fat and that nothing can be done about it, there's no use arguing to the contrary. It would only be a waste of breath! But every now and then some ex-overweight writes a letter so sincere and so courageous that it reads like a challenge. It makes you want to see, even though you are "naturally fat," whether you can't do as well, perhaps better. Snatches of those letters are relayed to you today.

One of the most amazing weight reductions undertaken this year is recounted in the following note:

"I started on the diet January 17. At that time I weighed 270 pounds and I now weigh 190, but I want to get down to 135 pounds. I have found the balanced diet the road to health, so I'm sticking."

She has lost 80 pounds! And even a few pounds' weight loss is difficult for a person only five feet one!

And 54, Too

The changes in measurements are equally amazing. She reduced as follows: Bust, from 53 inches to 38; waist, from 48 inches to 33; hips from 64 inches to 41. She took—23 inches off the hipline. And—to keep you from arguing that age is against your reducing, we'll tell hers—she is 54!

A reducer who had been stout all her life writes frankly:

"I finally made up my mind to reduce and in just 40 days I have reduced from 188 pounds to 158. I have been very faithful in my exercise and I am overjoyed with the results. Here are my measurements, before and now: Bust, from 42 inches to 36; waist, from 37 inches to 30½; hips from 48 to 39½. There are so many women who think that because they have been stout all their lives they can't reduce. Tell them from me that they can!"

Another reducer lost 32 pounds in three months, which bespeaks a rigid adherence to diet. But the biggest improvement was made in her proportions through exercise, as you can see: Bust, reduced from 36 inches to 33; waist, from 31 to 25; hips from 42 to 34. She trimmed eight inches off her hips, and six off the waistline, all of which further proves the value of exercise.

Home Study Aids Careers

CAREFREE SUMMER is over, autumn is here with its sobering thoughts. And many a young man or woman wonders "What will I be doing—where will I be—a year from now?"

Those going to college can look forward to an ever-expanding world of new knowledge, new contacts. But those unable to go—do they have only the same dull job to look forward to?

In these days of wide cultural resources no one needs to feel condemned to a rut, to uninteresting contacts. A college course can be had at home—and often your own special interest may be your best starting point.

Perhaps you delight in the athletic exhibitions you see in movie "shorts," you love to go to games. Then at your library read about the Olympics, first held in ancient Greece.

The Greeks, you find, were not only great in athletics, but in sculpture, philosophy, literature.

Study these subjects in outline books, up through the ages to modern times, and you will be "going to college." You will acquire the broad background of knowledge that marks the college type, that wins attention in social and business life.

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "Suppose You Haven't Gone to College," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

Basic Wardrobe

ANNOUNCER—We now present Miss LaJeanne DeSpain, expert on beauty, fashion, speech, posture, conversation, art, music, politics, love-making, rose culture, badminton and guppey raising, in another broadcast in her series, "The Personality Glamorous."

MISS DeSPAIN—Thank you, Mr. Spiel. Good morning, my dear friends. Today I am going to talk on the most crucial problem that is now facing American womanhood—the fall wardrobe. But first let me read you this lovely little note that I have just picked at random out of the tons of fan mail that awaited me this morning at the studio. Now just listen to this:

"Dear Miss DeSpain—You saved my marriage by your recent talk on chin straps. You are doing a marvelous work. Won't you tell soon how to get rid of buffalo moths?"

ELOISE M.

Thank you, Eloise M. It is so lovely of you listeners to write in this way and tell me how I can help you in achieving what is every woman's birthright—a radiant, magnetic, compelling, glamorous, devastating, calculating—or rather, I mean captivating, personality.

Now about your fall clothes. I am only going to outline what I consider a basic wardrobe for the average woman.

Of course, your first essential is a nice all-purpose fur coat. I think it would pay in the long run to get mink. Nothing gives a woman such a feeling of self assurance as a mink coat. And, as the poet has said, self-confidence is the first step to beauty. Moreover, men adore mink. A recent Nation-wide poll has shown that nine out of ten women who were wearing mink coats on the street were accompanied by men escorts.

However, a great many men prefer silver fox and since it is a little early now to wear mink I would suggest that you pick up somewhere a little silver fox bolero to bridge the season with. Then with an ermine trimmed black velvet evening coat or cape you will have all the wraps you need for the entire season.

Now with a mink coat and a silver fox bolero you do not need a great many dresses. However, there are times when you have to take off your coat and for such emergencies I would have several little knock-about dresses—two of silk and two of wool should suffice—that is, if you get basic dresses that you can build up with accessories such as the new massive gold jewelry a large bib necklace of putty colored or amber beads, some cultured pearls—and by the way always be sure that your pearls are cultured as men respond more quickly to cultured pearls—

Half a dozen evening dresses should meet all your needs. You should have one for definitely formal events and I would get a stunning creation for this because men like to escort the woman who is the cynosure of all eyes as she enters the ballroom. Then you will need one for the informal formal event, if you get what I mean, and one for the formal informal event, one for dinner, one for the theater and one for those numerous vague parties when you're not sure what you ought to wear.

Now, friends, as my time is up, I am going to continue my talk on the basic wardrobe at this same hour tomorrow. Also at that time I shall speak on budgeting, how to make pin money at home and the use of leftovers.

Gently Reared, Lonely Girl Who Found Perfect Bliss In Brief Love Affair Asks if It Was Worthwhile

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Are a few months of complete and ardent happiness worth a lifetime of knowing that you were not the refined and conventional young lady that you should have been? Do a few months of happiness make up for nearly 20 years of loneliness? I shall go back to the beginning of my life and say that I was born in a small town, the baby of a very well-to-do family. I had everything that any little girl could want.

Then came the depression and with it, the death of my mother. Both proved to be a great shock to my father. But the only thing that impressed me was the death of my mother, because Dad still managed to give me everything, even though he had to sacrifice a great deal to do so.

A few years later, my father married a very nice lady and we moved to the city. I cannot say that I disliked my step-mother, or that she disliked, me. I think it was merely a case of jealousy on the part of both; and also, the fact that my step-mother was anything but maternal and is not, as yet, a mother. The result was that I felt very far away from Dad, and she influenced him against giving me my way about things. Being very young, I felt that Dad no longer loved me, and that my new mother didn't want me to have any fun. When I went to them with my little troubles, they practically ignored me.

Three years of this environment proved very detrimental to my mental poise and as a result I was sent abroad to school, but was soon recalled because of war scares. I entered college and remained one year. I was restless, as I had been all my life, and I decided to go to business school. In the two years since my return from Europe I have gone promtrotting, to house parties, night clubbing, everything that one does for excitement. I was gay but not happy, and my parents were interested only in my health.

About eight months ago, a young man was introduced to me and we soon became good friends. He was the only person who had ever been interested in what I did, where I went, if I had fun, and did I really think I was happy. Yes, I was; but only because of him. Our friendship soon became an awe-inspiring love. It was beautiful and I was really happy. I may have been foolish in doing some of the things I did. But I loved the boy and he loved me. I loved him so much that I killed his love for me. I loved him so much that I was afraid he would be captured by some other girl. I did not want him to see or even to dance with other women. It was only natural that he would resent this and that some of his love would die.

He is gone now, because of my foolishness. He will never see me again unless by accident, and yet I am not sorry for anything that transpired between us. I did not know that when a girl will do anything for a young man he soon becomes weary of her and looks around for other conquests. He knew that I loved him and I believe now that he left me not only because he resented my jealousy but also because he knew he had made a conquest and felt the time had come to pass on.

Now I will soon be able to get a job and look around for another kind of happiness—the happiness of independence. Will this make up for the love I have lost? And will I profit from my experience? Yes. But it does seem a shame that a girl has to lose so much to gain just a little. I do believe that if parents were a little more interested in giving their children more than just money and good times that the young girls of today would not be in so much turmoil; that their one real love would not be such a brief affair; because they would be better schooled about love and would know how to handle its appearance intelligently.

I know that I will never again love anyone as much as I have loved this young man who brought me my first real happiness. But I do know that I will love in the future with a stronger sense of pride and intellectual control. But will I be content in the future, knowing that I let something very fine slip through my fingers? Or will I always resent my parents for not educating me in love and true feelings?

At 19 it seems very foolish to write a letter like this, but I lost the only person in the world who spelled happiness for me. And I don't want the same thing to happen to any other young girls because of their parents' lack of interest in all that vitally affects them. Most sincerely.

NINETEEN.

Brave Heart Rejects Cynicism and Regret

DEAR NINETEEN: One with your gallant and generous spirit need suffer no gnawing regret for having fumbled a first defenseless encounter with Love. I cannot believe that anything "very fine" slipped through your fingers when this boy took himself out of your life. His loss is incomparably greater than yours, if he but knew it. And perhaps he may come to realize that fact in future years.

To read your letter is to recognize the fact that it was penned by a thoroughbred, since only persons of the highest moral caliber—possessed of indestructible purity of purpose—have the grace to review their mistakes without whimpering, for the purpose of seeing what lessons they may contain, that will be of benefit to themselves and others.

Your document is likewise remarkable for its hardy, unsentimental lack of bitterness toward your lover, for his betrayal of trust, and toward your parents for their witless failure to assist you in developing an emotional balance and psychological maturity of viewpoint that might have obviated a painful experience. This proves that you have already won through, without such help, to an enviable degree of emotional stability; it suggests that you come of excellent stock.

It is encouraging indeed to feel that you do not intensely resent, even now, your parents' careless sin of omission. And I trust that you will not permit such an attitude to develop in future. Resentment—as E. Stanley Jones points out in his book, "Victorious Living"—is a crippling sin against one's self; a paralyzing handicap to personal growth. It is an emotional reaction inextricably bound up with self pity, and should be avoided at any cost.

Far from being a "foolish" letter from a girl of 19, yours is a poignantly straightforward and discerning recital, highlighted by an intuitive wisdom that is singularly disproportionate to your experience. Many another girl who had suffered a similar disillusionment would have failed altogether to grasp the point which you perceive, namely, that the woman who would find security in love must love with "a strong sense of pride and intellectual control."

Many another girl would have chosen to believe that love is a snare and a delusion and that all men are knaves and liars, seeking thereby to exonerate herself of all blame for what had happened. The courageous honesty with which you have accepted the lesson that life had to teach, in this instance, gives every reason to believe that you will eventually find a love that is worthy of your qualities: a love beside which this bittersweet adolescent experience will fade into nothingness. M. H.

Virginia Ham—Beaten Biscuits, Says Ernest Humphrey Daniel

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

DO YOU KNOW the tradition that you should always buy ham cut from the left hind leg of the pig? This theory developed because the porker scratches itself so much with his right foot that it makes the ham very tough. Persons who take hams seriously assure me there is a lot of truth in this idea and for that reason they never eat anything but a left-legged ham.

Mr. Daniel

Ernest Humphrey Daniel, prominent business and civic leader, thinks regardless of the side from which the ham is secured that there is nothing quite so delicious as a home-cured patrician Virginia ham. There are almost as many ways of cooking a ham as there are hams. But, they all boil down to the same objective—the delicious food that Mr. Daniel says is a favorite with him. Cold sliced ham, uncooked vegetables, snappy cheese and beaten biscuits are also on his preferred list.

By snappy cheese, this dairy enthusiast says he means what was called "store" or "rat cheese" in his boyhood days in Virginia. The variety is now designated as Cheddar cheese or American Dairy cheese. As he is a president of the Carry Ice Cream Co. I suspected that ice cream would be his favorite dessert. I confirmed this assumption and learned that vanilla is the favorite flavor.

Every true Virginian loves beaten biscuits and Mr. Daniel is no exception. The art of making beaten biscuits is in the number of strokes given the dough. There is an old Southern rhyme to the effect that 200 licks are given for the home folks—never fewer, and if company is expected there must be 500 strokes. To avoid giving the wrong number of strokes I have accepted the method worked out by the School of Household Science and Arts of Pratt Institute. The following is it's recommendation.

Beaten Biscuits

Mix 2 cups flour, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ cup shortening and about 1/3 cup water to make a very stiff dough. There is a machine made for kneading these biscuits. If such is not available, put dough on a very solid wooden block (floured) and beat as hard as possible with a smooth, heavy wooden stick. A hickory one is traditional, but a heavy wooden potato masher is a good substitute. The foundation must be very firm. An ordinary table will be damaged by the beating. Give 1,000 strokes—about 20 minutes continuous beating. Place on a floured board, roll ½ inch thick, cut with floured cutter—2 inches and prick each with a fork. Place on greased baking sheet in a moderate oven until cooked through, about 12 minutes. If a machine is used put the dough through it from 100 to 150 times.

Mr. Humphrey was born in Fairfax County, Va., and educated in the District of Columbia schools, and George Washington University. He is president of the Carry Ice Cream Co., director of the Beatrice Creameries of Chicago, treasurer of the International Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers, chairman of the National Dairies industry committee and vice president and chairman of the District Boy Scouts.

Arrivals From Europe Cheered by Capitalites

Concern Felt for Many in Warring Nations; Bambie McKenna Back From Finland; Merle Thorpe, Jr., and Nicholas Biddle Arrive

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor

IF THIS COLUMN lately seems entirely given over to heralding homecomings from Europe, it's because they're a chief concern of Washington residents these days. Time was, of course, when returning Capitalites were accorded merely notes in social columns, but that was before war blacked out interest in other social happenings and every arrival from abroad was an achievement.

Over current tea cups, talk revolves around only two subjects—when and whether persons who have been traveling in Europe will be safely home; and whether this country can stay strictly out of foreign entanglements. Along the latter lines, you can hear plenty of convincing arguments on both sides, none of which I care to report. But about expected returns of Washington residents, I can tell you that:

Miss Bambie McKenna, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Royal T. McKenna, who went over to England a few weeks ago to visit her aunt, arrived on the Queen Mary and is now in New York. Mrs. McKenna, who has been in Seal Harbor, Me., for some time, will join her daughter in New York today and both will come directly to Washington.

Also coming in on the Queen Mary was Merle Thorpe, jr., whose parents are expected to return to Washington today after being away several weeks. They visited some time in the Southwest, and then returned to White Sulphur, W. Va., for a few days. Their son, Day Thorpe, who also spent the week-end at the resort came back to Washington Monday.

When she went over, she expected to be back the latter part of this month.

Miss Newman, who has recently been a house guest of Maj. and Mrs. Gilbert X. Mrs. Ralph William Close Returns From England With War Sidelights

WHAT IT'S LIKE to cross the Atlantic under the shadow of war in Europe was described yesterday by Mrs. Ralph William Close, wife of the Minister of South Africa, who was lucky enough at the last moment to get passage home on the Queen Mary, landing in New York on Monday.

"From the first day at sea we had blackouts," declared Mrs. Close from the legation kitchen, where she was making a housewifely tour of inspection. "Paper was pasted over the portholes. We could read in bed, but if we went out on deck at night we were not allowed to light cigarettes."

Mrs. Close heard King George's address on Sunday morning while she was eating lunch in the dining room. "As meals were served in relays," she explained, "we had to appear on time at table, instead of drifting in when we wished. News that England had declared war against Germany was told us after church services on Sunday."

"The atmosphere on board was sad and anxious," she continued, "but the ship's personnel was simply wonderful and took perfect care of us. Naturally all the crew and stewards were worried, as they didn't know when they would be able to return to England or what was happening to their families."

Mrs. Close rushed back a month earlier than she had expected and had to share her cabin. "But of course I was delighted to do it," she said.

Despite the fact that the tea dance room on the Queen Mary was occupied by 40 women and their beds, there was dancing on board as usual. The lecture room and library were also crowded with extra cots, which were left up during the day. The ship went at full speed all the way across, and there were two days of rough weather.

UNTIL SHE DASHED with her luggage for Southampton to board the Queen Mary, Mrs. Close had been with her daughter, Mrs. W. S. Mann, wife of Commander Mann, of the British Royal Navy, at a seaside cottage in Sussex.

"It was amazing to see how carefully this little village had made plans in event of war," said the minister's wife yesterday. As an example of how the English seem to be thinking of everything, she said that arrangements had even been made to send to the children evacuated from London their favorite newspaper comic strips.

Mrs. Mann, who paid Washington an extensive visit last year, will remain at her cottage in the country with her children, instead of opening her London house. "I don't know where Commander Mann is now," said Mrs. Close.

THE WAR has changed the plans of many Americans. Mrs. John Winant and her daughter, Constance, had passage for Europe on a boat sailing yesterday, but now, of course, are not going. They were to have joined Mr. Winant, former chairman of the Social Security Board, who now heads the International Labor Office in Geneva.

Miss Winant was in Middleburg over the week-end to attend the coming-out party of Miss Barbara Iselin. She is also a friend of Adelaide Chatfield Taylor, daughter of the Wayne Chatfield Taylors, so probably will spend some time in Washington this winter.

The two Winant sons will attend St. Alban's School this winter. Mrs. Winant is at the family home in Concord, N. H.

WASHINGTON'S YOUNGEST diplomatic hostess will be 19-year-old Graziella Estigaribbia, whose marriage to 40-year-old Horatio Fernandez, Paraguay's new Minister here, will take place next month. The newly appointed envoy was speaker of the house in his country and served as attorney general during the Chaco war. He has been a member of several delegations of the Paraguay government to other countries, and was at the Pan-American Conference in Montevideo. He will not come to Washington until after his marriage.

The Capital has not yet made the acquaintance of the future Senora de Fernandez, as she did not accompany her father, Gen. Estigarribbia, to Washington, where he served as Minister for a year or so. He went home last June to become President of Paraguay.

Pablo M. Insfran, Charge d'Affaires of the legation, will leave the end of the month to return to his homeland, where he will be minister of economy.

Their wedding took place in the Church of Saint Aloysius, the Rev. Thomas Edward Mitchell, cousin of the bridegroom, officiating, assisted by the Rev. Henri J. Wiesel and the Rev. William Horigan.

The bride was escorted to the altar by Robert Dore Fuller and John Joseph Fuller, cousins of the bridegroom. She wore a gown of white satin with a fitted bodice, full skirt and long sleeves. Her fingertip veil fell from a halo of white satin and orange blossoms and she carried a white prayer book from which fell sprays of lilies of the valley.

Her maid of honor and only attendant was her sister, Miss Betty Houlihan, of Chicago, who wore an ice-blue satin dress made with a fitted bodice, full skirt and puffed sleeves. Her picture hat of French pink felt was trimmed in blue velvet and she carried a bouquet of pink roses and blue delphinium. Francis X. Genau was best man for his brother and the ushers were Joseph A. Genau and Robert A. Genau, other brothers.

A breakfast at the Dodge Hotel for members of the two families followed the ceremony. Mrs. Genau, mother of the bridegroom, wore dark blue crepe with black accessories and a corsage of lillies of the valley. Another sister of the bride, Mrs. Albert Schlag, chose a dress of airways blue with matching accessories and a corsage of orchids.

As her going away costume the bride had chosen a frock of Alice blue crepe with dark blue accessories. She topped off her ensemble with a corsage of yellow roses.

The bride is a graduate of St. Ita's Academy in Chicago and her husband is an alumnus of Georgetown University's school of arts and sciences and its dental school.

Joaquin Elizalde Cuts Trip Short, Returns to D. C.

The Resident Commissioner of the Philippines, Joaquin M. Elizalde, has returned to his apartment at the Shoreham after an air trip across the continent.

He had intended to fly on to Manila, but the international crisis brought him back to Washington. Senor Elizalde's aide, Juan Toreno, is expected to arrive in the Capital today.

Senora Elizalde and their two daughters, Senorita Elenita and Senorita Cecilia, who left Washington early in the summer for a trip around the world, are at present in Switzerland, where they may remain for some time, as the commissioner thinks that staying in Switzerland probably would be safer than trying to return immediately to the United States.

Miss Nordeen Tells Of Germans' Views

Not Everybody in Reich Is Behind Nazi Program, Friend She Met There as Delegate To Church Youth Conference Advises Her

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

"Not everybody in Germany is behind this program. Please pray for us."

Georgia Nordeen, one of the United States delegates to the World Conference of Christian Youth, in Amsterdam, addressing the Woman's Council of the National City Christian Church yesterday, told of this request made of her by a German woman.

Miss Nordeen, representing the Disciples of Christ, was one of 325 delegates from this country. Following the sessions, June 24 to August 2, in which 1,350 youths participated, the young people toured other European countries including Germany. It was while being entertained in a German home this request was made to Miss Nordeen and four other young foreigners with her. "Do not judge us too harshly," their hostess begged. "We are all living under strain. I hope we have proven to you tonight that everybody in Germany is not behind this program."

Would Refuse To Fight

Miss Nordeen, who was introduced yesterday by Mrs. O. B. Atwood, new president of the Woman's Council, told of the Amsterdam conference sessions. There was vigorous sentiment among the young people in her group against going to war under any circumstances. Many of the boys, she said, declared they would refuse to fight. Expressions of this determination were mainly among the Americans. Young people of France accepted as a matter of course responsibility for fighting if war came, she said. Those of some of the other countries did not take a definite stand, but all were agreed that international disputes could be settled by other means than by war if nations were united in behalf of arbitration.

This subject and that of the relation of Christian youth and the state were of greatest interest to the discussion groups, said Miss Nordeen. The American delegation placed allegiance to God before that to the state, but the Europeans differed on this point.

There was also a difference in their attitude and that of the Americans in regard to the individual and his religious life. The young people of this country were of the opinion that there should be emphasis on social action tending toward universal betterment, while the Europeans believed it was sufficient for the individual to live his own life according to his light.

Resolutions Held To Be Valueless

No resolutions were passed at the convention. The delegates decided resolutions were scraps of paper which meant nothing. They concentrated their efforts on understanding each other's viewpoints and forming friendships.

There were no official German delegates, but two youths from Germany took their holidays at that time and attended the conference.

Miss Nordeen, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Nordeen, of Mount Rainier, Md., was one of two delegates from the District. The other was Miss Dorothy Potter, daughter of Louis A. Potter, minister of music at Calvary Methodist Church, and Mrs. Potter. The girls arrived home a week ago Sunday. Miss Nordeen is a graduate of the University of Maryland, where she was a member of Alpha Xi Delta Sorority, and is the young people's worker of the Disciples of Christ for the Capital area.

Devotions Led By Japanese Girl

Preceding her talk yesterday, a short devotional service was conducted by Hide Mano, a Japanese student at Lynchburg College. Miss Mano is preparing to return to Japan and teach in a missionary school in Tokyo supported by the Disciples of Christ. She is a guest at the home of Mrs. E. M. Reese, 423 Allison street, until the opening of college, when she will enter her senior year. Before enrolling at Lynchburg, she was for two years a governess to the children of the secretaries at the Japanese Embassy here.

The program and luncheon of the Woman's Council yesterday opened its fall season, and was attended by guests from the Young People's Conference of Disciples of Christ in the District. Among them were Thelma Herriman, Jane Gongwer, Helen McIlree, Ruth Sellers, Marilu Reese, Rex and Ben Barger.

New officers of the council, in addition to Mrs. Atwood, are Mrs. James M. Gongwer and Mrs. J. B. Crosy, vice presidents; Mrs. Edwin L. Davis, recording secretary; Mrs. E. Eugene Merriman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Ralph Humberd, treasurer, and Mrs. James B. Cunningham, retiring president. Mrs. Raphael Harwood Miller, wife of the minister, also is a member of the board.

Return From Abroad

Mr. and Mrs. Carl F. Jeansen after an extended trip abroad have taken an apartment at Tilden Gardens on Connecticut avenue.

Credit Women's Breakfast Club Plans Informal Lawn Fete at Adams Home

MEMBERS of the Credit Women's Breakfast Club have kept up regular meetings through the summer despite vacation breaks in their ranks. This month they will have not only their breakfast meeting on the third Thursday but also a party tomorrow night.

Mrs. Ruth Adams will be hostess at the party, an informal lawn fete, at her home, 4430 Ellicott street northwest. The girls will wear slacks or shorts, prepared for an evening of games and contests—one of the latter a glamour girl revue. Root beer and hot dogs will be the chief refreshments.

The credit women have planned programs of practical use in their business in the last season. Mrs. Alice Underwood, as educational chairman, has conducted a course of study covering all procedure in a credit office from typing to taking a credit application to interviewing the customer.

Only one speaker has been presented in recent months and that was Judge Lucy Somerville Howorth, president of the Business and Professional Women's Club, who addressed the group shortly after return from Norway. Next winter the members plan to invite other prominent men and women to address them, discussing other subjects than credit, to which they have devoted themselves almost exclusively until now.

An address to the breakfast club makes two demands on a guest speaker which talks before other organizations do not entail—they are early rising—and brevity. The credit women meet at 8 a. m. and are on their way to their offices at 9. There are no long programs—just an hour for eating, business and speaking. The breakfasts are held at the Raleigh Hotel.

Miss Wilhelmina Gude is president of the club, serving for her second year with all the other officers: Miss Martha Bean, vice president; Miss Mary Hodan, treasurer; Mrs. Ruth Adams, corresponding secretary, and Miss Alice White, recording secretary. There are 50 members.

THE CAPITOL HILL GROUP of the Business and Professional Women's Club yesterday held its second meeting, a luncheon at the Methodist Building. Judge Lucy Howorth, president of the club, and Mrs. Nell V. Smith, president of the Professional Writers Club, were guests. Mrs. Elsie Coleman is chairman of the group which will meet regularly in the winter season. Its members are women employed on the Hill who are affiliated with the B. and P. W.

Arms Embargo, U. S. Neutrality Put Into Effect

Propaganda Curb Planned; Defenses To Be Strengthened

It is estimated that Britain and her allies will be deprived, by the embargo, of about 600 warplanes being produced here on order. Unfilled portions of the orders were said to amount to around $45,000,000 or $50,000,000.

Embargoed are various types of rifles, machine guns, howitzers, ammunition, bombs, tanks and other military vehicles, vessels of war and armor plate for them, aircraft and aircraft engines and parts, many types of explosives, flame throwers, and numerous types of gas.

The proclamations name as belligerents Germany, France, Poland, the United Kingdom, India, Australia and New Zealand. Canada and South Africa have not yet definitely gone to the aid of Britain.

Our Sympathies Unaffected

The first, noting that a state of war "unhappily exists" between the countries named, says the laws of the United States demand "an impartial neutrality." However, the President pointed out they do not interfere with the "free expression of opinion and sympathy," a statement in line with his declaration of Sunday night that he could not ask the people to remain neutral in thought as well as in action.

The document listed 17 unneutral acts prohibited by law, including enlistments here for service in armed forces of the belligerents, and preparation in this country of any expedition against any belligerent.

War vessels of the fighting nations were warned not to use United States ports or territorial waters to prepare for hostile operations against their enemies. Belligerent war vessels which enter United States ports must, generally, leave within 24 hours. They may take on only enough fuel here to carry them to their nearest home ports and only a peace-time supply of food. No more than three warships of a belligerent or its allies may occupy an American harbor at one time.

Canal Zone Notified

Accompanying this proclamation was an executive order directing the War, Navy, Treasury, Commerce, Justice and other departments and agencies, as well as the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, to enforce the proclamation.

The embargo declaration cites sections of the neutraltiy law requiring the President, whenever he shall find a state of war exists between two or more foreign states, to proclaim that fact; sections providing for the embargo and sections enumerating penalties for violation.

Embargoed Articles Listed

There follows, in the proclamation a list of the articles which shall be considered arms, ammunition and implements of war under the resolution.

The President made it clear, at his press conference, that the arms embargo supersedes all contracts entered into for delivery of American planes and other embargoed materials to a belligerent. Elsewhere it was pointed out that although Canada is not a belligerent, it would be illegal to ship embargoed materials there for transshipment to England or other nations at war.

75 Planes on Way

From Los Angeles, Calif., came word that two British freighters and a French steamer, loaded with 75 American planes, cleared United States waters yesterday in advance of the embargo decree, and were convoyed by two Canadian destroyers.

Mr. Roosevelt said that Americans returning from Europe have the right, for 90 days, to use ships of belligerent powers, and that the 1930 London naval treaty forbids the sinking of such ships until passengers and crew have been provided a safe haven.

He made it clear that German denials that a submarine sank the British liner Athenia had not been accepted here. He said no report on the issue had been received from the embassy at London, but that statements had been received from some of the survivors a submarine sank the vessel.

He said that in ruling out naval convoys for American war refugees it had been decided there would be less danger of attack if American ships, with flags painted on them, and with lights on at night proceeded normally, than if they were escorted by warships. Alone, and so conducting themselves, the President said, such ships could be picked out as non-belligerent if the slightest care is used.

Explains Defense Needs

With regard to filling gaps in the national defenses, he pointed out that patrol duties would require the reconditioning of some of the laid-up destroyers of the World War type, and that additional Army men will be required for the Canal Zone.

Aside from the arms embargo, the neutrality law forbids Americans to travel on the ships of belligerent nations—after ninety days—to furnish supplys to belligerent warships, or grant loans to belligerents. It lets the President, with some limitations, specify what articles are subject to the ban.

Proclaiming neutrality in the Panama Canal zone, Mr. Roosevelt also issued an executive order designed to "prevent damage or injury to the canal." It authorized canal officials to take complete charge of transiting vessels, even to the point of ejecting the officers and crew from the ships. It specified that no more than three ships of a belligerent or its allies may be in either terminal area of the canal at one time, and that no belligerent vessel may be in the area more than 24 hours exclusive of the time required for transit.

Belligerent aircraft may not fly over the Canal Zone.

To the ban on travel on belligerent ships by Americans after 90 days, Secretary Hull announced an exception. Americans may use these vessels, he said, if traveling over waters other than those adjacent to Europe and in the submarine zone.

Specifically, he said that without special authorization of the Secretary of State, Americans shall not be permitted to travel on the belligerents' vessels "on or over the North Atlantic Ocean, east of 30 degrees west north of 30 degrees north or on or over other waters adjacent to Europe or over the continent of Europe or adjacent islands."

German Liner Bremen Still Missing; Other Ships Reach U. S. With Refugees

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 5.—The $20,000,000 German liner Bremen, biggest merchant marine prize now on the high seas, was still unreported tonight—a fugitive prowling furtively toward a safe harbor six days after leaving New York without passengers.

Because it is regarded as unlikely now that she would try to run the British naval blockade, shipping men believe the 51,656-ton ship is heading for a country likely to remain neutral.

Like another North German Lloyd liner, the Columbus, it was thought the Bremen might head for Veracruz, Mexico. In any case it was held probable that the Bremen with her 908 officers and crew would be safe from sinking because of the value of the ship. Then again, it was possible she might already be in the hands of enemy naval craft.

Polish Liner Arrives

While word of the Bremen was awaited, shipping schedules were slowed down further by the fear of submarine attacks or capture at sea.

The Gdynia American (Polish) liner Batory arrived from Gdynia, Poland, and Copenhagen via Halifax, with 842 passengers and tied up indefinitely at Hoboken, N. J., across the river from the point where the French liner Normandie and the Cunard White Star (British) liner Queen Mary are docked with no immediate prospect of sailing back to Europe.

The Batory's captain disclosed the ship had been escorted through the English Channel by two British destroyers and also down the coast from Halifax.

The United States liner President Roosevelt, carrying 539 passengers, 125 above normal capacity, arrived today from Cobh, Ireland. She carried $21,000,000 in gold.

Cots lined corridors, public rooms and foyers. Most passengers were Americans and happy to be back.

The Cunard White Star liner Samaria, a day late, came up the bay behind the President Roosevelt with 693 passengers, 245 of them Americans. She carried between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 in gold.

Passengers said the Samaria observed blackouts at sea and zigzagged in accordance with wartime precautions.

The sailing of the President Roosevelt was advanced to tomorrow to speed back to Europe for more American refugees. Fifty men were assigned to paint giant American flags on each side of the ship fore and aft and to paint big flags on tarpaulins covering forward and after hatches. The name of the ship was painted in big letters on the sides.

The Champlain, of the French Line, arrived with 1,178 passengers, 784 of them Americans. About 60 slept in cots set up in the gymnasium and lounges.

Blackouts were in effect during the crossing. Wooden covers and black paper covered portholes and upper deck windows.

Passengers said the British and French statements of war had been announced en route but none reported having seen naval craft at any time.

Two other French liners were en route: The De Grasse, due tomorrow, and the Ile de France, which left Havre Saturday with more than 1,000 passengers.

The Holland America liner Nieuw Amsterdam sailed from New York this afternoon with orders to omit regular stops at Plymouth, England, and Boulogne-sur-Mer, France. Her departure was delayed two hours while workmen finished painting Dutch flags on her sides. She carried 295 passengers, including Prince Felix of Luxembourg and his son, Prince Jean.

The liner Statendam sailed for New York from Rotterdam with more than 1,600 passengers.

The Italian liner Rex, which is scheduled to leave Naples for New York Saturday, has been booked to capacity by returning Americans.

Rates for the voyage have been set considerably higher than normal. The minimum price for first class passage is $400; tourist passage is $250.

The higher tariffs are believed to be due to increase insurance rates and the fact that the vessel is expected to carry only a few passengers on the return trip.

Only dollars are being accepted in payment and the sailing will give Italy well over $500,000 of needed foreign currency.

War Zone Bonuses Due

New York, Sept. 5 (AP).—National Union representatives and Frank J. Taylor, president of the American Merchant Marine Institute, agreed in principle tonight on union demands for life insurance and monthly bonuses for seaman on ships entering war zones.

Excambion at Boston

British Tankers Leave Texas

Mid-Western Milk Faces Rejection Here

Officials Oppose Schulte Proposal To Open Market

District officials yesterday indicated that the latest proposal of Representative William T. Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, and the Embassy-Fairfax Dairy for opening the Washington market to Midwestern milk will be rejected.

A shortage of health department inspectors and a lack of funds for extensive traveling allowances, were given as reasons why the District will not send inspectors into Ohio and Indiana to examine dairy farms.

Final decision of the Commissioners probably will await the return to the city of Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal because of the legal question raised by the acting health officer, Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger. On Saturday he asked for an opinion and instructions.

Officials pointed out, however, that even though the 1926 milk act permits the health officer to send inspectors wherever producers request a permit to ship milk into Washington, that the inspections are necessarily restricted by the limitation of the staff.

The health department now has only eight field inspectors to keep check on the dairy farms of near 1,400 producers in Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia. Two more inspectors check the local dairy plants and the Baltimore dairy which ships milk into the Capital in paper cartons.

James J. Ward, president of Embassy-Fairfax, proposed to the health department to establish a milk-receiving station in Ohio, providing he is given assurance that the District will inspect the farms and grant them permits when approved.

Schulte, who sponsored legislation to open the Washington milkshed to Midwestern producers, accompanied Ward to the District Building last week in behalf of the proposal and called on the Commissioners and health officials.

Capital News In Brief

Multiplicity of Causes

A Chinese restaurant proprietor listened yesterday with more interest than sympathy to the appeals of two men for aid to stricken China.

He remembered they had been there twice before. The first time they wanted funds for China and the restaurateur contributed. The second time they said they were policemen and got another contribution. Yesterday the Chinese held them in conversation until police could be called.

Investigation, police said, showed the men, who were arrested, had been collecting donations for two months, from Chinese for China, from Jews to combat Nazis, from Gentiles for police benefits and from Germans to combat Jews.

Loitered With Toy Pistol

A 32-year-old meatcutter was arrested yesterday in the 1000 block of N street northwest and held for loitering. He had a toy pistol in his pocket.

Lieut. John Fowler, chief of the robbery squad, said he knew in advance an attempt would be made to hold up a grocery store messenger. How Fowler's detectives were where they were when they were is anybody's guess.

Embryo Lawyers' Fate Due

Nine hundred and sixty-eight men and women who toiled on the bar examinations for three days here last June may learn the outcome next Monday, Judge Ralph Givens, chairman of the District court committee on admissions and grievances, said yesterday.

If Continent Shifts, Hold On, Is Word

Geodetists From 35 Nations in Parley; Admit Discoveries Might Aid War

The possibility that continents may drift around a bit was raised yesterday at a meeting of the International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics as an explanation of astronomical and geological "errors" accumulating over the years.

While maintaining that he did not necessarily support the continental drift theory, Dr. Harlan T. Stetson, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, declared in a report on "Variations in Longitude" that the supposition "must be met and evaluated without prejudice."

He intimated that astronomers who get irritated when their observations fail to stay put and "certain geologists who would like to have continents moved" so as to make earlier calculations correct, might benefit most from a recognition of the possibility.

Discoveries Useful in War

To judge from figures he presented, the man in the street scarcely needs to bother—just so he stays with the continent.

Artificial earthquakes, mechanical sounding devices and all the latest means for exploring ocean bottoms also were on the program for the first sessions held by the scientists at George Washington University.

Although no one mentioned it officially, many of the recent discoveries could be used in warfare just as effectively as in explorations. By means of sounic devices for instance, locations of submarines could be detected from distances not dreamed of in the last war and recent great improvements in the "art of undersea exploding" could be tried out on ships as easily as to make earthquakes.

Come From 35 Nations

The delegates, who come from 35 countries, will be welcomed formally to the United States tonight at the Departmental auditorium by Secretary of State Hull. In case he is unable to attend the meeting, Hugh L. Wilson, former Ambassador to Germany, will extend the welcome.

Dr. E. C. Bullard, of Cambridge University, England; Dr. F. A. Vening-Meinesz, celebrated Dutch scientist, and Dr. W. T. Thom, of Princeton University, led discussions on oceanography yesterday. D. J. E. Church, of the University of Nevada, presided over a meeting of the Commission on Snow and Glaciers.

Boy, 3, Killed, 2 Others Hurt In D. C. Traffic

A 3-year-old boy was killed yesterday, the District's fifty-eighth traffic fatality, and two 5-year-olds were injured on the city's streets. Last year's traffic toll at this time was 64.

Joseph L. Carter, colored, 3, of 2488 Phillip's court northwest, was crushed under the wheels of an ice truck while playing in an alley near his home. The heavy vehicle, operated by William S. Burley, colored, 50, of 1156 Nineteenth street northwest, was moving about 5 miles an hour, police said. Burley will appear at a coroner's hearing.

Eugene Cater, 5, of 1206 I street southeast, was struck by an automobile at Eighth and D streets southeast and was sent home after treatment. George Newton, 5, of 1230 Thirty-sixth street northwest, was admitted to Georgetown Hospital after he fell from the rear of an ice truck near his home.

K. of C. to Open Season

The fall season of the Spalding Council, Knights of Columbus, will be opened at 8:15 p. m. tomorrow at Knights of Columbus clubhouse, 918 Tenth street northwest.

Last night was final rehearsal for the water pageant which will start at the pool at 8 tonight. In addition to exhibition of swimming and diving, those who attend will see Ruth Schenkil (left) do a toe-tap dance. She climbed the ladder to persuade you to come. There will be mermaids with grass skirts, too. Loraine Schrenker, Eugenia Burrows and Audrey Woodford (left to right, at left) will do an Hawaiian number. Smoot Strike Ended as Aid To Building

Company Agrees to Negotiate Settlement With Employes

The Smoot Sand and Gravel strike—which for three weeks kept 5,000 men idle, and paralyzed $54,000,000 worth of construction work in Washington—was compromised yesterday "to avoid further embarrassment to the building industry. The announcement was made by John P. Coyne, president of the building and construction trades department, American Federation of Labor. Normal operations at the Smoot plant will be resumed this morning, a company spokesman said last night.

The office of W. E. Reynolds, public building administrator, said work would be rushed on the new Social Security and General Federal Office Buildings, major projects delayed by the deadlock. The Federal Office Building is scheduled to house census activities beginning about January 15.

Basis of the agreement, it was announced, is recognition of the union and promise by Lewis E. Smoot, chairman of the firm's board of directors, to negotiate a contract covering wages, hours and other conditions of employment.

This conforms with a proposal submitted two weeks ago by Howard T. Colvin, Labor Department conciliator, which the union accepted but the company turned down.

In announcing the deadlock was broken, Coyne said last night resumption of operations at the Smoot plant "did not mean the union had definitely settled its dispute with the company."

Smoot employes will actually return to work under the same conditions which prevailed when they struck, but Coyne promised full A. F. of L. support in launching immediate company-union negotiations.

Father Walsh Returns to G. U. After Lecturing in Europe

"I feel sorry for you Americans with no war to go home to."

That was the farewell spoken nine days ago by a young Briton to the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, vice president of Georgetown University, who returned to Washington yesterday after three tense weeks in England, France and Holland.

Dr. Walsh explained that the Englishman was no jingo but simply shared a conviction common throughout France and Great Britain—that "the final clash of fundamental concepts has begun."

The educator boarded the President Roosevelt in Southampton August 27 after a dramatic 72 hours, beginning when the American consul at The Hague, Holland, notified him the liner's sailing date had been advanced a week because of the crisis.

Dr. Walsh at the time was lecturing on "The Evolution of American Diplomacy" at the annual session of the Academy of International Law. He completed his series before rapidly thinning audiences, as the governments heading for war called home their nationals.

Antiaircraft guns had been erected within sight of The Hague's Peace Palace when Dr. Walsh hired a taxi at midnight, August 26, to drive him along the dikes to The Hook of Holland, where he caught the boat for Harwich, England.

He found London "preparing stolcally and methodically for a siege," Waterloo Station crowded with children en route to shelter zones, trucks outside banks and business houses loading up records for transport to safety.

On the docks at Southampton "women and children were in tears" when they learned the President Roosevelt could not accommodate them all.

The "chaos and heartache" suffered by stranded Americans in Europe demonstrates "the absolute necessity of a strong American merchant marine," Dr. Walsh said. He recalled that the United States "paid a heavy price for that same lack of foresight" in 1914. Dr. Walsh was caught in Austria-Hungary on the outbreak of the World War.

American policy toward the war must not be formulated without the most careful study, said the regent of Georgetown's Foreign Service School.

McCartney's Son Tells Of Blackout at Sea

A blackout and other precautions on the Queen Mary and the passengers' reactions to news of the Athenia disaster and the war declarations were described here last night by Noble McCartney, son of Dr. Albert J. McCartney, pastor of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church.

Arriving in New York on Monday morning after a trip from England he said "seemed like months," the Princeton University student brought assurance that his parents, about whom much concern has been felt, are safe in London. The time of their return is uncertain, he added.

"When news reached us Sunday night of the Athenia's sinking, the order was immediately given forbidding lights and smoking on deck, and no one was permitted on the top decks," he asserted. "While the passengers were of course shocked at the news, they did not feel unduly alarmed about the safety of the Queen Mary as it was then on the North American coast.

"No one thought that the Germans would be bold enough to torpedo a ship so close to the United States," he declared, "so there was no evidence of panic."

Young McCartney, who was accompanied by two classmates from another city, with whom he had been touring Europe, said the reaction to Britain and France's declaration of war against Germany was that America would soon be in the conflict.

City Cleans Up Debris From Storm

D. C., Park Service Employes Busy in Basements, Streets

District and Park Service employes worked under clear skies yesterday to clean up the city, after the worst September thunderstorm in hitsory had left damages not yet officially estimated.

Ralph S. Chapin, sewer department official, who handled 300 complaints from houseowners during and after the storm Monday night, said the job of cleaning out flooded basements, and checking for damage to the city's sewer system was nearly complete late yesterday.

The Sewer Department called in all its available men at midnight, canceled all routine duties, and kept crews busy through the day responding to complaints or residents, Chapin said.

He said that of the 300 complaints, about 75 were for flooded cellars. The District sewers handled flood water conditions without serious damage, Chapin said.

Despite the heavy punishment of the rainstorm, Washington's parks and park roadways were in normal use through the day, according to the office of National Capital Parks.

The only reminder which Rock Creek Park motorists had of the deluge were "do not enter" signs along Piney Branch Parkway betwene Sixteenth street and Beach drive. This stretch, closed while debris is removed and minor repairs made, will be reopened "in a day or two," said officials.

Pending an inventory, they withheld estimates of storm damage throughout the park system but predicted it would not be high. The greatest single loss was the undermining of a temporary bridge over Rock Creek at K street. Repairs were made by CCC enrollees who worked throughout the night Monday and yesterday morning. The bridge was back in use yesterday.

Scotch to Rise; War Catches Dealers Short

Imported Liquor Famine Feared; Stocks Here Short

Washington lovers of imported liquors may as well prepare to dig deeper into their pockets within the next 30 days, owing to the war in Europe.

Wholesale prices of imported liquors, especially Scotch, which is particularly relished by Washington's elbow benders, have not yet been advanced, John A. Korman, president of Independent Distributors, Inc., said last night. But, he added, stocks of local wholesalers are woefully short and prospects of replenishing them are uncertain.

"We have been in touch with New York distributors," he said last night, "and they tell us their stocks are depleted. So far we haven't been able to learn what we can expect for the future."

Korman and other wholesalers explained that they had been forced to halt certain cencessions on sales of imported liquors and, as a result, some retailers had complained of price-boosting.

Yesterday, Korman said, his firm "had a wonderful day's business" in imported liquors, especially Scotch and vermouth. But "with the drinking season approaching we expect a strong demand for champagne and other imported wines."

Anna Rogenmoser Is Dead at 51

Mrs. Anna E. Rogenmoser, 51, resident of Washington for 28 years, died yesterday at Garfield Hospital after a five-month illness.

A native of New York City, Mrs. Rogenmoser was the wife of Leonard J. Rogenmoser, Census Bureau employe. Others surviving are four daughters, Miss Jeanne Rogenmoser and Mrs. Gladys Quinn, of this city; Miss Lillian Craig, of Chicopee, Mass., and Mrs. Bertha Kay, of Hyattsville, Md.; her mother, Mrs. Mary Francis, and her father, William Francis, both of Ozone Park, Long Island, N. Y.

Funeral services will be held at 7:30 p. m. today at Ryan's funeral southeast. Burial will be at Wellsville, N. Y., Friday.

Retirement Bill's Loss Laid to 3

Special Dispatch to The Post

San Francisco, Calif., Sept. 5.—The blame or credit—according to the point of view—for the failure of Federal employe retirement amendments was fixed specifically upon three men by Representative Robert Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, in a speech before the biennial convention of the National Federation of Federal Employes here today.

Turning from a plea for extension of the merit system, the chairman of the House Civil Service Committee said: "In the last session of Congress amendments to the retirement law were considered. No doubt you are disappointed at the results attained. The failure to pass the type of amendments supported by your organization can be traced to three men.

Names Three

"The credit, or the blame, according to the point of view, rests with Mr. Stinson, of the National Association of Letter Carriers; Mr. Alifas, representing the machinists, and Mr. Alcorn, of the Joint Conference on Retirement. If they had supported the House bill it would have been accepted by the conferees."

He said that in his opinion the employes lost things of great value through failure of the conferees to accept the House bill.

The N. F. F. E., he said, "has taken the right, the far-sighted and the fair position on this matter. We cannot expect the Government to bear an undue portion of the cost of retirement. Neither can we expect the employes to have earlier ages for retirement without according the right to the Government to exercise the same option under proper safeguards," he said.

Asks Fairness to Taxpayers

"If we are to protect this system we must amend it so as to make it fair to the citizens who pay the cost. In some respects this is not true now," Ramspeck added.

On the merit system, Ramspeck said: "If we wish to retain the liberty and the freedom we now enjoy we ought to be willing to make the effort necessary to have honest and effective government. We cannot have an honest nor an effective administration of our Government if it is placed in the hands of a political party or faction not interested in proper governmental policies."

He continued that "if our Government is in the hands of a political machine and that machine lives on spoils, we will have bad government. If those in power are interested primarily in patronage and contracts they will sacrifice policies of government, they will become corrupt and inefficient and the people will rebel."

Friday Brings a World Premiere to RKO-Keith's

Star, Producer, in Person, With 'Nurse Cavell;' Lunts to Open National's Season October 2; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

ANOTHER WORLD PREMIERE of extraordinary timeliness, preceding that of "Thunder Afloat," already announced for September 15, will be celebrated at RKO-Keith's Theater on Friday night of this week. It promises to be one of the most notable events of its kind in local motion picture annals.

George Schaefer, president of RKO-Radio Pictures and RKO-Theaters corporations, has designated the National Capital as the city for the first showing on any public screen of "Nurse Edith Cavell," produced in this country by Herbert Wilcox, one of the foremost of England's producer-directors, with Anna Neagle, remembered for her sterling impersonation of the Queen in "Victoria the Great," as star. Both Miss Neagle and Mr. Wilcox will make the trip to Washington to be present in person when their later joint achievement is disclosed to the public for the first time.

BELL

The star and her producer will arrive in this city Friday noon and will be greeted by the Hon. Melvin C. Hazen, president of the Board of District Commissioners, and other Washington officials. A press interview will follow immediately after their arrival at the Carlton Hotel. Following a dinner to the dramatic desks of Washington, Baltimore, Richmond, Norfolk and other eastern cities, Miss Neagle and Mr. Wilcox will make a joint personal appearance on the stage at RKO-Keith's preceding the showing of "Nurse Edith Cavell."

This world premier is unique in that it is not "tied in" with the regular Washington engagement of the picture. The premiere will consist of a single showing Friday night at 9:30 o'clock. The regular booking is tentatively penciled in for early October.

In order that there may be no confusion in the public mind, it should be understood that "In Name Only," which is being held for a second week at RKO-Keith's, with Carole Lombard, Cary Grant and Kay Francis starred, will be shown continuously all day Friday through the 7:35 p. m. screening and will be resumed Saturday morning, September 9.

Readers of this department of The Post have been informed at some length, from time to time, as to the factual story Producer Wilcox has sought to incorporate in "Nurse Edith Cavell" and the exceptional resources that were placed at his command to insure the picture's accuracy. Official archives, contribution by those who knew Edith Cavell in life—some of whom appear in the cast—and other valuable data, made available during the 25 years since the first World War, all were at Mr. Wilcox's disposal. While "Nurse Edith Cavell" is declared to be neither partisan nor propaganda, it comes to the screen at a moment that lends it multiplied interest and, one suspects, poignance.

Hard on the heels of the settlement of the major controversies that threatened a general strike in all branches of the American theater comes official announcement from Manager Edmund Plohn, of the National Theater, that the new season of living drama will be inaugurated on E street the week of Monday, October 2, with a single weeks' engagement of Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne in their peculiarly stylized acting version of Master Will Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew." Never before seen in the Capital, this offering will be the first of the subscription plays presented under the auspices of the Theater Guild and the American Theater Society of Washington.

Following the Lunts, the week of October 9, will come Helen Hayes in the Charles MacArthur-Ben Hecht West Coast success, "Ladies and Gentlemen," in which Washington's brilliant star turns to comedy.

Other bookings for the 1939-40 season at the National include "Outward Bound," with Laurette Taylor and Florence Reed; Katharine Cornell, in the Playwrights' Company's successful production of S. N. Behrman's "No Time for Comedy"; Ethel Barrymore in her new play, "The Farm of Three Echoes"; the erstwhile controversial musical, "Leave It to Me," with William Gaxton, Victor Moore and Sophie Tucker, storm center of the recent strife; the Eddie Dowling production of Paul Vincent Carrol's "The White Steed"; Tallulah Bankhead in Lillian Hellman's sensationally successful "The Little Foxes," and the new streamlined edition of the Ziegfeld "Follies."

A lice start, even if a little later than has been the rule in recent years.

An important item in Manager Plohn's announcement is to the effect that work has started under a $10,000 contract to the Hudson Air Conditioning Co., for a comprehensive modernization of the National's ventilating system. This installation will be the final step prior to the eventual air-cooling of the historic playhouse to make it available for year-round use.

Yesterday was not devoted entirely to sitting on the receiving end of an almost continuous messenger service. Before these interesting bulletins began to shower their desks, the guys and gals of the press sat in on a preview screening of "Blackmail," starring Edward G. Robinson, and practically had their hair singed, as well as curled, by the torrid sensationalism of the film play opening on the Capitol screen day after tomorrow.

"Blackmail" is a high-powered melodrama of the oil fields and the chain-gangs that opens and closes with blistering oil well fires, with a tale of treachery, brutality and mild horror sandwiched in between. In its story of the supreme double-cross, persecution of the innocent, hair-breadth escapes and mounting suspense, this subject may be relied upon to move any audience out toward the edge of its collective chair. It is vigorously played by the star, Gene Lockhart, Guinn "Big Boy" Williams, John Wray, Arthur Hohl and a long cast of subordinate characters, with the old "heart interest" centered in Ruth Hussey and Master Bobs Watson, who recently did such fine work with Lionel Barrymore in "On Borrowed Time."

If you think Eddie Robinson is the only star in the film, wait until you see Gene Lockhart in the role of the oiliest rat you ever clapped an eye on!

They slipped over a fast one at yesterday's screening, too. Ahead of "Blackmail," something by the name of "The Ash Can Fleet" was bounced up there on the screen to give credit for the invention of the submarine and the depth bomb to David Bushnell, who died some 100 years or so ago. From the number of times it made use of the unquoted term of "thunder afloat," one wonders . . .

The Olney Offers Week of Rousing Fun

'Thieves Fall Out' Is Briskly Acted Mystery-Comedy

By Nelson B. Bell

"THIEVES FALL OUT." The Olney Theater presents Mary Brian in a new mystery-comedy in three acts by Alice MacKenzie and John Hayden. Staged by Mr. Hayden; settings by Charles Squires.

—THE CAST—

Joe	Allen Swyer
Louis	Joseph Vitalle
The Boss	Arthur Pierson
Clarence	Richard Irving
Spud	Fred Sherman
Raymond Ford	Jack Sheehan
Agatha	Mary Brian
Dill Farnsworth	Frank McNellis
Jergens	Richard Midgely
Bradley	John Sikken

The most enthusiastic, spontaneous and, one might almost say, continuously hilarious reception of the Olney Theater's current season last night was bestowed upon "Thieves Fall Out" by a near-capacity audience. As a consequence of a diluvial Monday night, last evening's performance was the one which assumed all of the aspects of the play's "first night."

Presented for the first time on any stage at the Olney this week, "Thieves Fall Out" is reputedly headed for Broadway and the "big time." While there are still occasional weaknesses that need to be remedied, audience reaction to its deft combination of mystery and farcical comedy last evening would seem to indicate that this is not too vaunting an ambition for a play which, for the most part, moves briskly, sustains its mood with as reasonable fidelity as this type of charade is supposed to and virtually reaches its final curtain before the real solution of the "mystery" is divulged.

Suspense Is Vital Factor

This, of course, is the type of serio-comic thriller that prohibits any revelation of its plot beyond the fact that a band of jewel thieves have taken possession of an abandoned house on Long Island Sound for a hideout from which they may engineer their forays with some hope of secrecy and security and in which they may safely divide the spoils of their midnight depradations. Only the house happens to be haunted, by reputation, and, to all appearances, actually, as the unbroken events of a single night begin to unfold themselves.

The invading plunderers are The Boss, Joe, a dim-witted "lookout;" Louis, the gunman; Clarence, the former prize fighter, now the Jimmy Valentine of the mob, and Spud, the best second-story man in the business. To their number are added a glib and dapper little man by the name of Raymond Ford, the ostensible owner of the property and a surprisingly willing accomplice in all of their evil deeds, and Agatha, a mysterious young woman of unknown identity, who seems to be wandering through life in a trance.

Ghostly Goings-On

All of these nervous people are made the jittery victims of a weird assortment of ghostly manifestations that take the form of hidden voices, strange tappings, gusty sighs, pens that rise up and write without the aid of human hands, the ringing of "disconnected" phones, hidden panels and, for Clarence, a few invisible, but sound clouts on the head with a blackjack. Added anxiety is lent the proceedings by Louis' irresistible impulse to knock Joe off with a .38 as the speediest means of coping with his magnificent stupidity.

The development of all this hokus-pocus is accompanied by a staccato barrage of amusing lines that sometimes are pretty heavily sprinkled with paprika. Many of them are dragged in by the heels; others are obvious wisecracks that are anticipated even before they are spoken. There needs to be a bit of judicious weeding out here. There is, nevertheless, such an abundance of more or less legitimate comedy in the piece that it is productive of a great deal of honest laughter. "Thieves Fall Out" is by far the most expertly acted offering that has graced the boards of the Olney. Arthur Pierson, Joseph Vitalle, Fred Sherman, Allen Swyer and Richard Irving form a splendidly diversified quintet of journeyman crooks and Jack Sheehan, as Raymond Ford, scores an unerring and perfect bullseye. Mary Brian, as Agatha, the only feminine figure in the play—and "figure" is the word—contributes an ingenuously deceptive characterization that is a gem. Another female character—a housemaid, even—would add needed balance to the predominantly male gender of the cast. Frank McNellis, as a caricature sheriff; Richard Midgley and John Sikken complete the roster of principals.

The Olney, by all means, this week for a rousing and joyous evening in the theater.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

HOLLYWOOD.—Eddy Duchin arrived here this week, and again the rumors were revived concerning his protraying the title role in the "Life of George Gershwin" . . . Duchin first won acclaim at the Central Park Casino, when he played the piano in Leo Reisman's Orchestra. Capt. John Wanamaker, the department store merchant, was a ringsider every night and approved of Duchin's playing . . . "Eddie, would you like a Bechstein piano?" Wanamaker asker him . . . "Of course," Duchin assured him—and the next day the expensive piano arrived, with a note of presentation from Wanamaker. The note read: "This is for you, P. S.: But please use our Piano Tuning Department, because business is lousy—J. W."

PAUL DRAPER yesterday settled his contract with Sam Goldwyn for 75 per cent of the salary stipulated . . . Goldwyn had intended using Draper in the Goldwyn Follies—but there won't be any more Goldwyn Follies, nor will Sam ever again employ such artists . . . Goldwyn offered to place the dancer in the new picture, "Raffles." When Paul read the script and learned that he was to be introduced into the story by having a party guest say: "Guess whom we have here with us—Paul Draper, the dancer," he arranged for the settlement . . . "Artists slow up the screen story anyhow," Goldwyn declared. "Sure—look what Heifetz did to "They Shall Have Music."

CHARLES CHAPLIN is telling his friends that the international complications won't affect his production of "The Dictator." The recent activities in Europe have increased Chaplin's resolve to do the picture, and, undismayed, he insists that he'll start shooting next week . . . George Stevens, the director, has an all-color movie of "Algiers," taken with his miniature camera during the production . . . Frank Morgan, who secured a straight five-year contract of employment, immediately insured his voice and health with Lloyd's of London . . . Alec Templeton, the blind pianist, will conduct a symphony orchestra in Chicago this fall. The arrangements now are being made.

ORSON WELLES has become the movie industry's foremost subject of envy, because of the contract which permits him to produce, direct, write and portray two roles in his first movie venture . . . Alva Johnston, the biographer, will do a three-article series about Welles for the Saturday Evening Post . . . At 20th Century-Fox a group of writers were discussing Orson's work and the fact that he is writing two roles for himself. They discussed George Arliss, who also had the distinction of portraying two roles—in "The House of Rothschild." But even two roles didn't suffice for Arliss. He met the scenarists to discuss the story and made the subtle suggestion: "You know, gentlemen, as a matter of historic fact, an important meeting once took place between Rothschild—and Disraeli."

LARRY ADLER, who is working at the Cocoanut Grove here, arrived from England, where he had been a guest at the home of the Duke of Kent . . . One of the ladies present approached Adler and said: "Can you play my favorite tune—'Lull in My Life'?" . . . Adler obliged, and later told Kent: "You introduced me to that lady, but I didn't get her name. She said her favorite song is 'Lull in My Life.' Who is she?" . . . "She," the Duke informed, "is the former Queen of Spain."

AL JOLSON is so distressed at the decision rendered against Henry Armstrong that he's announced that he'll never go back to New York to see any prize fights . . . Although the servants at Pickfair are very fond of Buddy Rogers, they still speak dreamily of the days when Douglas Fairbanks held court there and would startle the guests by walking fully dressed into the swimming pool . . . Alex Aarons, the producer, hadn't seen his sister, Ruth, ever since she was 14 and found it difficult to reconcile himself with the fact that she had become the world's table tennis champion. He returned to New York and was goaded into playing one game with his kid-sister. She treated him with the respect due a big brother—and permitted him to score a single point.

BEN BERNIE took Ashton Stevens' 80-year-old mother to the races at Agua Caliente . . He introduced her to "Mr. Marx, a friend of your son's" . . . Ten minutes later he presented "another friend of your son's, Mr. Marx" . . . And shortly thereafter Bernie brought a third Mr. Marx to her. They were Harpo, Chico and Groucho . . . "Tell me, Mr. Bernie," asked the venerable Mrs. Stevens, "doesn't my son know anybody except men named Marx?"

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Sept. 5 (INS).—The curtailment of the foreign market is having a serious effect on all the studios and while quality pictures will be in order you will see no more million-dollar epics until the war is ended. Big companies such as Warners, Twentieth Century-Fox and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lose $400,000 a week in European revenue, so naturally these spectacles and lavish productions are being postponed.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Warners have stopped work on the $200,000 stage being built for "The Sea-Hawk" and yesterday Hal Wallis decided instead to star the popular Errol Flynn in Somerset Maugham's "The Outpost" with Geraldine Fitzgerald as his leading lady. "The Sea Hawk" will eventually be made but not under present conditions. Should England accept George Bernard Shaw's wise suggestion that the theaters be kept open, it's doubtful even then that money could be taken out of the country.

Here's a surprising piece of news. The Group Theater of New York, according to Roman Bohnen, one of their leading actors and a member of the group's governing council, is going into the movie business. Bohnen, now in Hollywood working in "Of Mice and Men," says the group already has financing and is looking for film material either in original scripts or one of their own successful play productions. This right-about-face calls for some comment, I think, since this organization, the alma mater of John Garfield, Franchot Tone and other top actors, only gave permission with the greatest reluctance for their actors to accept roles in the movies.

Phyllis Brooks goes into Walter Wanger's "Send Another Coffin," with Pat O'Brien, as her first assignment since her return from Europe. Poor Phyllis is terribly worried about Cary Grant, who is on call for military service in England. It doesn't cheer her up very much, either, to be assured that Englishmen in America will probably not be called immediately until they have exhausted the enlistments over there. Cary, as you know, has taken out his first American citizenship papers, but they are not final—and if there is too much delay there is little doubt but that he will eventually be called.

Snapshots of Hallywood collected at random: George Raft won't get here until Thursday. Three guesses why; Rita Beery Foyt (Wally's former wife) and her bridegroom stepping out at Slapsie Maxie's, her first appearance since her recent illness; what's this between Franchot Tone and Mary Healy? It's an every night date now; Townsend Netcher is now buying Louise Stanley's dinners; Cary Grant and Phyllis Brooks carrying a portable radio with them to the Troc; Leonard Penn and Gladys George dancing together at the Troc, the first time since he was taken sick; the Jean Hersholt's hosted a party at Earl Carroll's for Prince George of Denmark, his aide, Eric Horblue and the Danish Consul and his wife; Wendy Barrie and Greg Bautzer dining at the Beverly Derby, the newest twosome in town.

The Paul Lukases are here and are happy that Daisy's mother, who has been living in Poland, is with them; Bob Oliver, who has been escorting Mary Martin hither and yon, eating ice cream sodas at the Delhaven with June Lang; Lin Howard flew in for the last race at Del Mar and right out in company with Bing Crosby. The boys go East to watch their nags run; William Holden, en route from New York, stops at his home town at O'Fallon, Ill., where the natives will welcome their hometown boy with a big celebration; the Wayne Morrises giving Mrs. M's mother a farewell dinner. She leaves for Chicago, returning in time for the arrival of the Morris heir; Huntz Hall, one of the Dead End kids, is spending all his time with Ruth Skinner who recently separated from Nick Stuart. They've been at the La Conga every night for a week.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Stage and Screen To Honor Edwards

The biggest testimonial in the history of show business is being planned for Gus Edwards, the first of the star makers.

Dozens of present-day luminaries who got their start with Gus will honor the veteran showman on his sixtieth birthday to signalize the world premiere of Bing Crosby's new Paramount film, "The Star Maker," a story inspired by Edwards' life and songs. With Eddie Cantor, one of Gus' discoveries, as master of ceremonies, the banquet will be held in Los Angeles immediately preceding the world premiere of the picture.

English Tutor Set For Terry Kilburn

Terry Kilburn, 11-year-old English actor, will have a tutor this fall—to teach him English. The young boy has become so Americanized in the last two years that his parents feel it necessary to have an English tutor for him, so that he won't completely lose the "native tongue."

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 5.—What next? Tomorrow our Mary Pickford will be queen of the National Tobacco Festival. And like Cinderella will ride into Richmond, Va., in a hundred-year-old coach, driven by Uncle Henry Mose, to be greeted by the Governor and then a Southern chit-chat over a national broadcast. Mary will tell about her first visit here. But has she forgotten her touring days when she covered every whistle stop in the country? No mention of Buddy serenading her en route. In fact, no mention made of Buddy.

HOPPER

Jean Hersholt entertained Dr. Paul Christian on set of "Dr. Christian" in which picture Jean is Dr. Paul Christian. He was amazed to learn there is a Dr. Christian Society of America composed of 40 doctors having that name—12 of 'em. Paul. Jean was made honorary president of the society.

"Murder in the Big House" is a field day for the Irish with Barton McLane, Charles Bickford, Dennis Moore, Barney O'Toole, Pat McGee, Pat Moriarty and Gene O'Donnell. O'Donnell was "Slick" in the picture, but sprained his ankle first day and was about to be replaced. "Look—do I have to be 'Slick'? Why can't I be 'Limpy'?" And he is.

An interoffice communication at Metro: "Please hand in your opinion on Fred Astaire and Eleanor Powell." Now, boys, no crowding.

Dartmouth Alumni will have its Hollywood opening September 17. Speakers will be Arthur Hornblow, Walter Wanger and Anton Keough, vice president of Paramount. Yes, "Winter Carnival" brought them together.

Bing Crosby's greatest supporter is Harry Tiel, Australian reviewer, who writes of "East Side of Heaven": It may sound ridiculous but it wouldn't hurt if Bing received an academy award. You just try and pick a flaw in his voice. I can't."

Charlie Ruggles has learned to conserve his energy. Has a slide from his bedroom window to the swimming pool.

Wonder if it's smart to make the Stephen Foster of American memories such a drunkard on the screen? In "Swanee" Don Ameche plays the part, and script calls for him to be inebriated in nearly every scene.

Dance Director Nick Castle, couldn't convince his back east relatives that he's important in pictures, 'cause they never see him on screen. So begged for a bit before camera, to prove his point. He won—in "Swanee" does a few steps— in blackface!

When fans write Joe E. Brown for his photo, he responds: "Send me yours first." He has thousands and values that collection of his fans' photos.

Jack Benny's lost so many books that he's designed a book plate that he hopes will shame borrowers into returning them. It's a picture of Abe Lincoln trudging through the snow, book under his arm.

Note on a Paramount call sheet: "If sun shining, no clouds and not too windy, we leave studio at 6 a. m. for location. In event of bad weather report to stage eight for dust storm scenes."

Warner's are making "Gambling on the High Seas" on a gambling ship. When an extra approached Wayne Morris and asked him to join in a game of roulette. Wayne said: "Sorry, but this is all I can afford." And dropped a penny in—a peanut machine!

Funny coincidence on the "Four Wives" set when Rosemary Lane asked Eddie Albert to feel her pulse, a hammer in the machine shop came out with a terrific boom, boom, boom.

Pupil Aids Magic Tutor Present Act

"I got the best of the deal when I gave Robert Young lessons in magic. As a matter of fact, I learned more from him than he did from me."

So declares Paul LePaul, professional magician and one of the greatest card manipulators in America, who acted as tutor to the actor when he played the magician in "Miracles for Sale."

"Watching Young practice his tricks," says LePaul, "made me realize that the magician is an actor, impersonating a character who can perform supernatural acts. But the magician concentrates on what he's doing with his hands, and doesn't as a rule develope his acting side, just as an actor concentrates on his characters. Well, I taught Young how to use his hands as he played a magician—and watching him taught me to use my head while my hands acted a magician."

*X WASHINGTON: WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1939 17

Walters Takes 22d as Reds Beat Cards, 3-1

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

Twenty years ago Jack Dempsey was loudly denounced as an American slacker rated second only to Grover Bergdoll. Next Tuesday evening when the National Boxing Association sits down to the festive board at the Willard Hotel its first honor guest in the 20 years of pre-convention banquets will be Jack Dempsey.

POVICH

Seemingly Dempsey has lived down his unhappy war-time record. For sheer popularity with Americans, Dempsey is a stand-out figure. His continued grip on the imagination of the public has been no less than amazing. Six weeks ago when he was an appendix patient at New York's Polyclinic Hospital, the deluge of inquiries as to his condition attested that he was the most famous patient in the long history of the place. From persons high and low came solicitous calls in unmanageable numbers.

In Washington, the N. B. A. committee has been besieged for invitations to its banquet since the announcement that Dempsey would attend. First to seek a place at Dempsey's table was Undersecretary of Treasury John W. Haynes, who admits that he does not know Dempsey, has never seen him, in fact, but is excited at the prospect

How does one explain the tremendous hold of Dempsey on the American people? His negative war-time record was widely publicized. He was a thoroughly beaten champion. He was and still is recognized as perhaps the outstanding exponent of foul fighting in the prize ring. A figure in two divorces, he has no great model of American domestic life. On the one side his debits in any claim to popularity are apparently overwhelming.

Rose to Fame American Way

But at this date, if one approached the man on the street and quickly shot the question, "Who is one of America's most popular figures?" the quick answer would be very apt to be, "Jack Dempsey." Perhaps it can be explained.

In a sense, Dempsey's fame was achieved in the American story-book way. In his early days there is no record that Dempsey ever paid many train fares. He rode the rods to the big fight centers for his first battles, and that fact gave him something of a romantic appeal. When he finally did become champion, it was a comparative newsboy-to-president story. Americans like that kind.

They liked him first, perhaps, because for all his viciousness in the ring, his actions out of it were those of a big, American kid. Outside the ropes he was as mild and soft-spoken in the same degree that he was terrific inside. He pretended to be nothing besides a fighter, and they liked that about him. And he had showed that he could take a set-back and come on again.

He illustrated his doggedness early in his career when as a brash young hobo from the West he was tossed in against big John Lester Johnson, Negro contender for the title, and heard two of his ribs crack. Badly beaten, Dempsey quit New York and bummed his way to the Pacific Coast to make a new start in the only livelihood he knew.

Phoney Shipyard Pictures

It was on the Coast that he first became something of a fistic figure and incidentally built up something of a case for himself when he was tried on slacker charges. It was revealed that Dempsey had fought Willie Meehan before an $85,000 house and his part of the proceeds was $240 and a licking by Meehan. The rest of the money went to a soldiers' benefit, an item that didn't do Dempsey any harm at his trial at which, incidentally, Dempsey was acquitted.

The chief hue and cry against Dempsey as a slacker was raised in 1918, when he was pictured as a shipyard worker on the Pacific Coast. It was a stupid piece of business by his manager, Jack Kearns, that gave distribution to the picture of Dempsey wielding a shipyard wrench, because Dempsey at the time was wearing the then modish patent leather shoes which, to say the least, were incongruous on a shipworker.

The fact is that Dempsey showed an eagerness to enlist in 1918, but Jack Kearns, realizing the value of Dempsey as an investment, persuaded him to file exemption papers. Dempsey, a married man at the time, could do that. Until he listened to Kearns, Dempsey had made plans to enlist at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station where Lieut. Jack Kennedy, an old friend, had prepared enlistment papers for him and actually procured him a uniform.

Booed in Carpentier Bout

Full realism of his failure to join the service first struck Dempsey perhaps on the July afternoon at Boyles Thirty Acres in 1921 as he prepared to enter the ring with Georges Carpentier, France's World War hero and heavyweight champion. French flags and bunting decorated the arena and Dempsey, the American, was booed as he entered the ring, with the cheers being reserved for Carpentier.

Dempsey's popularity was undoubtedly at its lowest ebb at that time, despite his four-round knockout of Carpentier. But in the succeeding years the sheer personality of the fellow began to assert itself. Americans liked the way he climbed out of the ringside seats and through the ropes to knock out Luis Firpo. Perhaps Dempsey's appeal was to the primitive in a man, at least at the outset, but they liked his conduct outside the ring, too.

Anyway, when Dempsey stepped into the ring with Gene Tunney, America's fighting Marine, the crowd was none too partial to Tunney that rainy night at Philadelphia, in September, 1926. And there is evidence that the high tide of Dempsey popularity began that night, in defeat. He voiced no alibis, and among a great number of people there was resentment that the title had been taken from Dempsey on points, and Tunney was disparaged as the first champion who had failed to win by a knockout.

At Chicago the following year, Dempsey was the pronounced favorite with the crowd despite the fact that again he was fighting the Marine hero, Tunney. And the fact that he was cheated of a knockout victory by a long count, undoubtedly contributed to the favor in which he was held. Anyway, Dempsey emerged from that bout as a solid sort of hero. The 13 years since have increased his stature.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

Philadelphia, Sept. 5.—The President had finished talking and the fight mob, sitting around the expensive hotel suite, seasoning the rugs with Mike Jacobs' cigars, expansively decided that Mr. Big did all right. "He threw them real good in there," Commented Mr. Will Miller, the Jack of all trades, who is now drumming up the local fight between Nova and Galento.

CONSIDINE

"But lemme tell you about this fight we got down here, before they grab the sports page space for the casualty lists," said Mr. Miller. "They haven't had anything down here like this fight since Dempsey blew his title to Tunney, and it'll do a quarter of million bucks if it does a subway plug."

"Speaking of Tooney," said a handler, "reminds me of Nova."

"Yeah," said Mr. Ray Carlen, Lou's manager, with a slight sneer, "because they're so different. If there ever has been any trouble between Lou and me, it's been because I made a Tunney out of him when he wanted to be a Dempsey."

Should Have Stood Back and Boxed

"That's why he fought Baer the way he did," Ray Archel, the trainer, said. "He could have won every round by standing back, like Tunney, and boxing Max. But, no, he wanted to slug with him, like Dempsey would of. Wanted to slug with a guy who killed one fellow and just about killed that poor Schaaf."

"He may not fight like Tunney," Miller said, "but he's like him in a lot of ways. Take the way he lives. He's got three suites upstairs, with fancy plumbing. He's got a special masseuse, a dietician, screwy hobbies. He does everything in the grand manner and when the guy's through work he curls up with Schopenhauer. Dempsey was one of those roll-neck sweater guys with a soup bowl haircut when he was coming along."

"In a way, I'm glad he crossed us and fought Baer the way he did. I mean standing there trading punches with him," Carlen said. "It proves to me somthing I should've known from the start: that Lou can take a punch much better than Louis, and give back just as much punishment—even if it takes him a little longer."

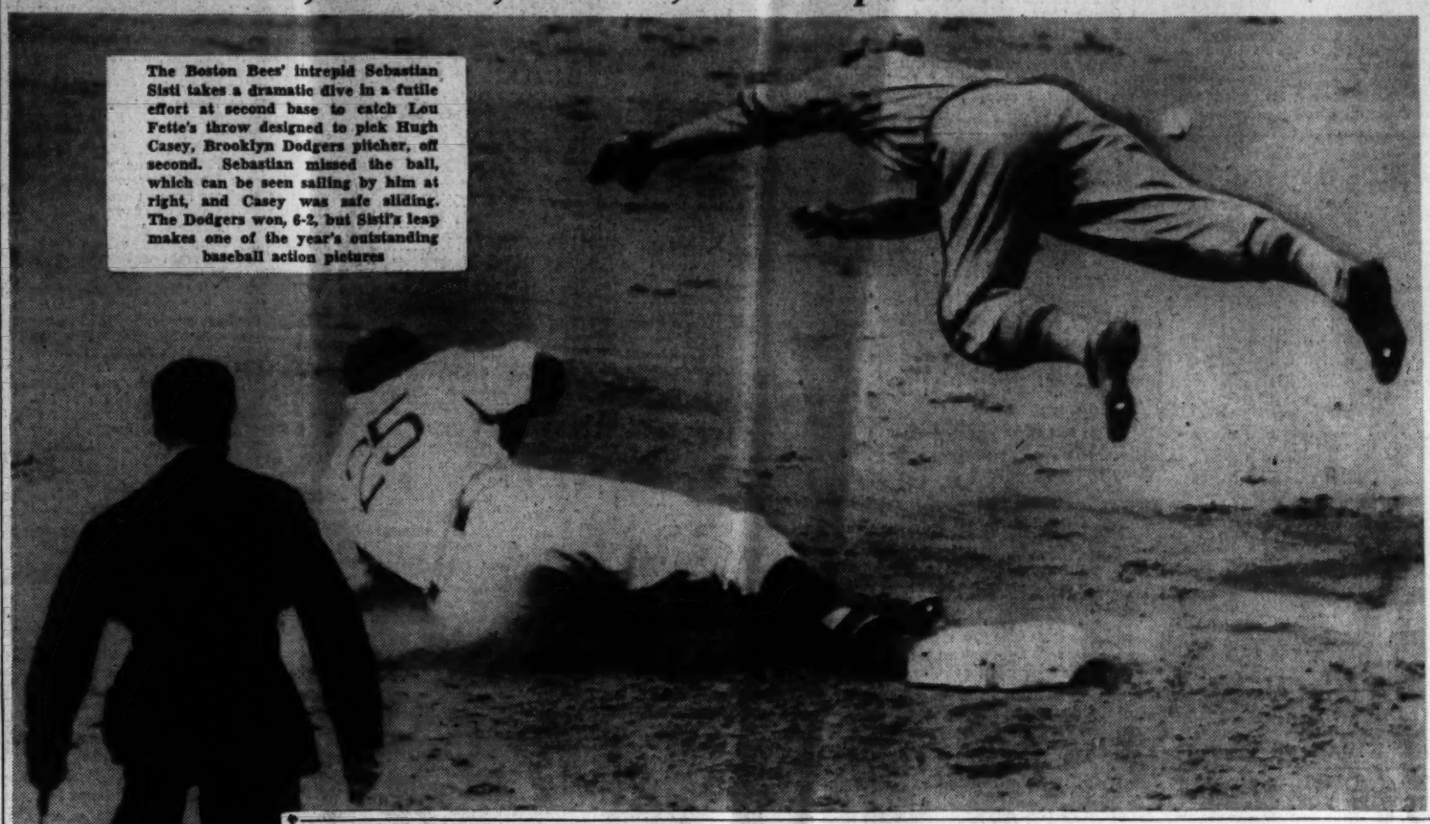
Punches Just Bounce Off Nova

"Maybe so, but he's slower than Louis," a reporter pointed out. "So what's going to happen when Galento lands a couple of those left hooks on his pimple? They ain't love pats. If Louis hadn't run out of the way in the first round, after Tony landed that first one, Tony would be champion today."

"That's my point," Carlen said. "If Lou doesn't want Tony to hit him, Tony won't. But assuming he goes out there and slugs it out with Tony, and Tony does land ,I don't think the punches will do anything except bounce. I don't think I've ever seen anybody could take it like Lou."

"Then he better stop taking them around the head, if he wants to keep reading that Schopenhauer guy," the reporter said.

Come Now, Sebastian, Old Man, Let's Keep Both Feet on the Ground



The Boston Bees' intrepid Sebastian Sisti takes a dramatic dive in a futile effort at second base to catch Lou Fette's throw designed to pick Hugh Casey, Brooklyn Dodgers pitcher, off second. Sebastian missed the ball, which can be seen sailing by him at right, and Casey was safe sliding. The Dodgers won, 6-2, but Sisti's leap makes one of the year's outstanding baseball action pictures

Dodgers Beat Bees, 6-2; Casey Gives 6 Hits

Dolph Camilli's Home Run Breaks Up Pitching Duel in 4th

By the Associated Press

Brooklyn, Sept. 5.—Rookie Hugh Casey, pitching with only two days' rest, handcuffed the Boston Bees with six hits today to lead the Dodgers to a 6-to-2 victory over the Hub City club.

He and Lou Fette hooked up in a tight pitching duel for three innings, but Dolph Camilli's twenty-fourth homer of the year with mate aboard in the fourth inning broke it up. After that the Brooklyns were never headed as Casey chalked up his eleventh victory of the season.

Another two-run splurge in the fifth, started by Casey's double, clinched the game.

Seary Wins Honors At Anacostia Links; Match Play Today

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The city public links championship went "big time" yesterday, with qualifying rounds scattered over three courses to weed the field from the 110 starters to the 32 that will begin the match play rounds today at East Potomac.

Medalist honors at the latter course went to Charles Alexander, making his first start in the winner's circle, who southpawed his way around the championship course in 76 strokes, 4 over par, to lead the 16 qualifiers. Alexander was out in 39 and back in 37 to top Earl Marcey, whom he meets in the first round today, and Alfred Shorb, a tournament threat from Silver Spring, by a single stroke. Marcey had 37-40 and Shorb, 38-39.

Four Tied With 77

The eight qualifiers at Anacostia were led by W. W. Seay, a top-ranking muny player for the past several years, who took six on the par 3 seventeenth hole and still posted a 70, 2 over par. His score was a stroke better than defending champion, Andy Oliveri, whose 35-38—71, was a stroke too high for the individual medal. The low scorer at each course received the medal.

Rock Creek's qualifications were more complicated with four tied with 77 for medalist honors, and will playoff at a later date. Julian Murphy, Maryland University golf team member, Frank Clark, red-headed, freckle-faced youngster, Jack Sinclair and R. J. Boucher figured in the tie at 77.

The Rock Creek scores were several strokes over the expected figure, and in fact the course played so tough that one of the participants, after playing badly for 17 holes, topped his second shot on the eighteenth and proceeded to

Nats Buy Chattanooga Pitcher for $15,000

Price Reportedly Paid by Griffith For Dick Bass, Right-Hander, With 18 Victories, 9 Losses

Clark Griffith dipped into the high minors again yesterday in an attempt to bolster the Washington Club and extracted a 28-year-old pitcher from the Chattanooga Club. For Dick Bass, a right-hander who has won 18 games and lost 9 for Chattanooga this season, Griffith reportedly paid $15,000.

Bass will not join the Nats until next season, due to the fact that the Chattanooga Club will participate in the Southern Association playoff series, which will not end until late this month.

The Nats' owner did not reveal the amount of cash which figured in the deal, but reports from Chattanooga indicate that the Washington Club will send two pitchers to the Lookouts in part payment.

The sale was made by Joe Engel, former Washington scout who now operates the Chattanooga Club and has worked closely with Griffith despite the Ntas' outright disposal of the Chattanooga franchise three weeks ago.

Highly recommended by Engel, Bass has been the most consistent of Chattanooga's pitchers. He is said to rely chiefly on a knuckle ball, a fact that interested Griffith in the light of the success of Dutch Leonard with the knuckle pitch. The Nats hope to team him with Leonard who, like Bass, came out of the Southern Association at the age of 28.

With the Chattanooga team in 1938, Bass also had a winning record, with 14 victories against 12 defeats. He compiled an earned run average of 3.9, which placed him among the league's leading pitchers in that respect.

The identity of the two Washington hurlers to be sent to the Lookouts in the deal has not yet been revealed, but doubtless they will be chosen from the Nats' farm systems. There are indications also that the Nats will option other players to Chattanooga.

Yesterday the Nats encountered an open date following their double victory at Boston and today they commence a three-game series with the Athletics at Philadelphia. Dutch Leonard will go to the mound today and will be bidding for his seventeenth victory of the campaign.

Chisox Beat Indians, 4-2

By the Associated Press

Cleveland, Sept. 5.—The Chicago White Sox scored 4 runs in a weird first inning today and coasted to a 4-to-2 triumph over Cleveland.

The defeat, giving the White Sox a sweep of the two-game series, dropped the Indians three games below the third placers.

Five singles, two errors and a balk by Harry Eisenstat figured in the White Sox surge in the first. Bejma and Ray Radcliff singled to start it. After Mike Kreevich grounded out, Luke Appling singled in Bejma. Radcliff scored when Chapman threw wild to the plate.

Gerald Walker singled in Appling and continued to second on the throw home. He took third on Eisenstat's balk and was safe at home on his attempted steal when Cleveland's Rollie Hemsley dropped the ball after tagging the runner.

Two Marines Lead National Rifle Matches

By the Associated Press

Camp Perry, Ohio, Sept. 5.—Two United States Marines led the way today as 2,027 of America's marksmen battled through the first four stages of the National Service Rifle Championship at Camp Perry's annual matches.

The huge field completed today the slow and rapid fire stages at 200 yards, the 300-yard sitting event, and the 600-yard prone slow fire, and had only the 1,000-yard prone stage to complete tomorrow.

Gunnery Sergt. Claude N. Harris, of Lancaster, N. C., and Sergt. Raymond D. Chaney, of Crane, Tex., deadlocked for the lead with 193 of 200. They held a 2-point edge over Sergt. Charles Willis, infantryman from Fort Benning, Ga., whose 191 was two ahead of fourth place George L. Meyrowitz, New York City civilian.

The two leaders must fire perfect scores tomorrow over the tough 1,000-yard range to break the record of 292 set in 1927 by Lieut. R. M. Cutts, of the Marines. Each of the 2,927 will fire 20 shots at 1,000 yards.

No man has ever won the National Rifle Championship twice, but Sergt. Harris stood tonight on the threshhold of that feat.

Row Draws $100 Fine for 3 Phils

New York, Sept. 5 (AP).—Manager Doc Prothro, coach Hans Lobert and Pitcher Waluter Beck, of the Phillies, were fined a total of $100 by President Ford Frick, of the National League, today for a row which marked yesterday's double-header with the Giants.

Prothro and Lobert each drew $25 penalties. Beck was assessed $50 because, the league stated, he made a threatening gesture at Umpire Dick Campbell.

All three were ejected from yesterday's second game in the ninth inning after a lengthy argument concerning a walk to Second-baseman Burgess Whitehead, of the Giants in the eighth.

Bordagaray Scores From 2d; Bucky Completes 25th Game As Reds Boost Lead

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Sept. 5.—The hot Cincinnati Reds tacked down another corner of the National League pennant many fans believe they have in the bag by nosing out the second-place Cardinals, 3 to 1, in a thrilling ten-inning struggle here today.

The victory stretched their advantage over the Cards to five full games and should have a great moral effect on Bill McKechnie's outfit as they come down the stretch.

Many followers were ready to count the Cardinals out if they lost today's contest—re-play of a 6-6 tie Monday.

Walters the Hero

Hero of the game was Veteran Bucky Walters, who held the Cards to seven hits, then stepped up in the tenth inning with the score tied and drove a sizling single to centerfield to score Frenchy Bordagaray from second base with the winning run. The Reds then scored another run to clinch it.

The victory enabled Bucky to record his twenty-second victory of the season.

Bordagary's part in the rally was greater than the score sheet indicates. The little speedster—he played with the Cards when they were famed for spectacular baserunning—smashed a hard single to short center but raced on to second and was safe when Lynn King juggled the ball.

Reds Score Early

The Reds scored in the first inning on Eddie Joost's triple and Ival Goodman's single. The Cards tied it in the sixth on a double by Enos Slaughter and a single by Johnny Mize. Three Cincinnati scoring chances were nipped by spectacular double plays.

Max Lanier, left-handed recruit, was charged with the loss although he was impressive in holding the Reds to 7 hits. It was Walters' 22 victory of the year.

'Skins Head East Minus Karamatic; 2 More to Fall

Los Angeles, Sept.—George Karamatic, stocky halfback from Gonzaga University, parted company with the Washington Redskins today when Coach Ray Flaherty cut his squad by one. Karamatic was given his outright release.

Failing last season to justify his advance notices, Karamatic was distinctly on trial at the Redskins' training camp in Spokane during the past month. He failed to impress Coach Flaherty, however.

The release of Karamatic reduced the Redskins' squad to 35 players, necessitating the dismissal of two more before the season opens on September 17.

The Redskins started their trip East today and will head for Boston for an exhibition game at Fenway Park as their final test before the opening game with the Philadelphia Eagles.

Sep Palin Drives Trotters, Coupled, to New World Record

By the Associated Press

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 5.—The veteran Indianapolis reinsman, Sep Palin, drove Greyhound (1:55¼) and Rosalind (1:56¾), coupled to a pole, to a new world's record as one of the feature attractions of the grand circuit meeting at the State fair grounds today.

The pair trotted a mile in 1:58¼ to beat their own world's record established at Syracuse a week ago by ¾ second, the New York performance being 1:59 flat.

Without missing a step and in perfect timing the flying champions were clocked at 31 seconds for the first quarter, then turned two consecutive 29½ quarters and came home in 28¾ seconds in the final dash.

The Norseman 2-year-old trot took three heats to decide after Spencer Scott owned by Charles W. Phellis, of Greenurch, Conn., won the first heat closely pressed by Kuno, driven by Harry Whitney, and then the latter won the decision in the second and third heats. It was a two-horse affair for the final heat the other six starters in the $9,375 event being ruled off. Kuno is

Lady Maryland, Arcaro Up, Wins Feature at Aqueduct

Pixey Dell, The Favorite, Runs Second

Six of 9 Starters Eligible for $10,000 Beldame Handicap Next Saturday

By the Associated Press

Aqueduct, N. Y., Sept. 5.—Returning to the races in top form after being freshened up for a month, Lady aryland, 5-year-old gray mare representing Gustave Ring, easily defeated eight others of her sex in the featured Melpomene Purse of seven furlongs here today. Eddie Arcaro was aboard the 16 to 5 shot, which led Pixey Dell home by two lengths in 1:24 3-5. Chicluna, an entry with Pixel Dell and Blue Fairy, finished third, five lengths behind.

Pixey Dell and the two others saddled by Andy Schuttinger ruled favorite at 3 to 1.

Six of the nine starters are eligible for Saturday's $10,000 added mile and a sixteenth Beldame Handicap. This new fixture for fillies and mares, named after the famous mare of that name, will have its first running on the week-end. Shangay Lily looms as the topweight starter of the race under 126 pounds. Lady Maryland gets in at 124 and Pixey Dell at 121. Others in today's feature named for the Beldame are Moonfolly, which finished fourth; Sketchbook, Mary Schulz and American Daisy.

Sketchbook, Mary Schulz and Smart Crack battled for the lead and only succeeded in racing themselves into the ground. When the stretch drive arrived, Pixey Dell gave her followers hope by forging to the front, but she was no match for Lady Maryland when the latter challenged in the last furlong.

Hasty Wedding Wins Feature At 'Gansett; Jockey Merritt Hurt

By the Associated Press

Pawtucket, R. I., Sept. 6.—In a race marred by an accident which sent a jockey to a hospital, John Hay Whitney's Hasty Wedding captured the $1,300 Manton Purse at Narragansett Park today for her first victory since returning East from California.

Jockey Bobby Merritt was rushed to a hospital in an ambulance after being thrown heavily when Puzzle Dance crossed her legs and went down at the finish. The filly was running in last place at the time. Attempting to rise, Puzzle Dance fell again and caught Merritt beneath her. Merritt struggled free and then collapsed.

Two lengths back of Hasty Wedding, a daughter of Chance Shot, at the finish of the 6-furlong test for 3-year-olds, was Mrs. Kay Smart's Saxonby, and in third place, another length behind, came Howard Welle's Boat's Crew. The favored Neon Light, owned by Sheldon Fairbanks, finished fourth.

Hasty wedding paid $13.20, $7.10 and $4.50; Saxonby, $6 and $3.90, and Boat's Crew, $4.

The lead changed twice before Hasty Wedding went to the front and stayed there. Approaching the quarter-mile pole, Saxonby moved to the front, but enjoyed the lead only a short time.

Jeffra to Train Here Today for Title Fight in Stadium

Baltimorean Works at 1:15 For Public

Archibald to Train After Challenger Concludes Session; Fight Monday Night

By Al Hailey

Washington's boxing world will be invaded today by the fighting machine of Harry Jeffra, former bantamweight champion, who will move into Turner's Arena at 1:15 p. m. to give a public demonstration of the weapons he plans to use Monday night at Griffith Stadium against Featherweight Champion Joey Archibald.

The Baltimore fighter will go through six rounds with his corps of sparring partners and work the equivalent of 10 rounds. Today's workout is his only scheduled appearance in Washington before the 15-round title fight Monday night.

Ballyhooed as one of the most versatile righthand punchers in the 126-pound class, Jeffra will work 30 minutes and then relinquish the arena ring to Archibald, now in the final stages of his training. Joey's sessions here have been marked by the ease with which his sparring partners landed rights, while Jeffra has been working almost in seclusion in Baltimore.

Quotes Shakespeare

Archibald, who gave up a medical school career to become world's featherweight champion, yesterday explained his peculiar allergy to righthand punches by quoting a bit of Shakespeare.

"Maybe there's a method in my madness," he said mysteriously in his dressing room at Turner's Arena, where he is training for the 15-round defense of his title Monday night against Harry Jeffra, of Baltimore.

The cocky little Providence fighter who once aspired to be a physician, went through a strenuous session with three sparring partners and again displayed a weakness for being hit by righthand punches.

Public Workout Today

This, and despite the fact that Jeffra will move into the arena today for a public workout, failed to perturb Archibald.

"Listen, everybody is talking about these rights I'm taking but they don't worry me," Joey explained. "I'm getting hit because I just can't seem to get serious in my training. It's always that way—I weave in, play around and the first thing you know I'm getting hit. But I'm not getting hurt, and I can hit these boys any time I want to."

Joey appeared temperamental under the criticism of his trainer, Charley Goldman, who gloomily pointed out that he is likely to find himself fighting the way he's been training. The champion would not discuss his fight with Jeffra.

"Always Like That"

"He's always like that—just like Ambers," said Goldman. "He don't say nothing about nobody he's going to fight until he's fought 'em."

Back in the not-so-dim days when Joey was what is known as a ham-and-egg $50 fighter, he tried to divide his time between fighting and attending medical school classes. The Providence routine was too much, however, and he gave up the latter.

The Baltimore challenger will arrive with Max Waxman, his manager, who put up $10,000 to get the fight with Archibald; Heinie Blaustein, his trainer; Charlie Gilley, Lou Transparenti and Jimmy Collins, who fight on the Monday card.

On paper, Jeffra, former bantamweight champion, might be put down as the favorite over Archibald. He defeated Sixto Escobar three times before winning the bantamweight crown and lost it back to Escobar in a 15-round match in the fourth round of which he received a broken jaw. Escobar has knocked out Archibald.

Champion Favored

The champion, whose 124 pounds carry a pair of shoulders a welterweights might envy, will be favored to retain his crown, however. Joey will work at 2:30 p. m. today at the arena. Today's broadcast of training procedure, over Station WOL, will be confined to Jeffra's 1:15 appearance.

Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn yesterday announced Maynard Daniels, hard-hitting Marine Reserve heavyweight, who has made such an impression here, will meet Howard Landgraffe, of Baltimore, in a six-rounder on the supporting card Monday night.

Gilley, Jeffra's stablemate, meets Billy Bullock, and Lou Transparenti meets Spider Armstrong, Archibald's stablemate, in six-rounders; Al Hart, Washington Barracks heavyweight, meets an importation under the label of Killer Ford, of Bear Mountain, N. C., and Buster Miller, local Golden Gloves 126-pound champion, debuts in a four-rounder against Jimmy Collins.

Delegates to the National Boxing Association's convention, meeting here September 11-13, will be special guests at the championship fight, which possibly will be broadcast over a national radio chain. Tickets are going in large blocks at the Fourteenth and W streets arena, and Ahearn yesterday said the 2,000 ringside seats have almost been exhausted. A $20,000 gate is expected by the local fight moguls.

Greenberg Homers as Tigers Win, 4-2

Third Circuit in 3 Days Breaks 2-2 Tie; Benton Hurls

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Sept. 5.—Six-hit pitching by young Al Benton and Hank Greenberg's third home run in two days swept the Detroit Tigers to a 4 to 2 triumph over the St. Louis Browns today and an even break in the series.

The Tiger right-hander and a former teammate, George Gill, dueled before a thin crowd of 1,797 in a playoff of yesterday's 5-5 tie, and the decision rested on Greenberg's swat into the leftfield pavilion with none on in the eighth.

The homer, Hank's twenty-fifth of the season, broke a 2-2 deadlock and shortly afterward fleet-footed Pete Fox doubled. Trying to steal third and thus getting a big start, Fox raced all the way home when Frank Croucher grounded out to Mark Christman behind second base.

Hader, Singh Will Seek to 'Hex' Duseks Tomorrow

Jack Hader and Nanjo Singh went into a double trance yesterday designed to put the "hex" on what they dubbed the "Dusek Dynasty." They will tangle with Ernie and Emil Dusek, respectively, tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium.

"We'll tear those bums to pieces," Hader and Singh chortled, enemies by nature, but friends through a common purpose.

Hader is meeting Ernie, who humbled Nanjo last week in the feature bout, while the Hindu is taking on Ernie's cousin, Emil, in a supporting exhibition. Nanjo has announced that he resents Promoter Joe Turner's action in reducing him to a preliminary status, but that most of all he resents the Duseks. Anything can happen, he hinted.

The night's business begins at 8:30 o'clock, and brings on such things as matches between Bob Wagner and Red Ryan, Alan Eustace and Ed Newman, and Abie Coleman and Ralph Garibaldi.

Joe Burk, Rowing Champion, To Race Here September 17

Joe Burk, who holds more rowing championships than he can count on his fingers, has accepted the invitation of the Potomac Boat Club to enter scull races, which will be held September 17, as part of the President's Cup Regatta, George Herman, president of the Boat Club, announced yesterday.

Burk, national single scull champion for the past two years, holder of England's Diamond scull racing title, and who recently won the Canadian championship for the third year, will compete against oarsmen from the Boat Club. He rows under Penn A. C. colors.

The racing course will be a three-quarter mile straightaway on the Potomac River between the Railroad Bridge and Hains Point, Herman said. Burk will enter the single scull event, but races will be held for double sculls, four-oared gigs, quadruple sculls and eight-oared shells.

Terps and Cardinals Start Football Drills

Maryland Outlook Not Too Bright as Dobson Tries to Fill Boots of Weidinger, Meade; 34 Report at C. U.

Football machines swung into action on two District fronts yesterday when the Flying Cardinals of Catholic University and the Terrapins of the University of Maryland turned out for the first practice sessions of the season.

A 34-man squad turned out at C. U., as Coach Arthur J. "Dutch" Bergman inaugurated his tenth season as mentor of the Cardinals. Five men have yet to report.

At College Park 35 aspiring backs and linemen turned out. Four—Robert Cochrane, Edward Lloyd and Robert Smith, in the line, and Pershing Mondorff, back—were missing, but all but Smith, working in New Jersey, are to report today.

A late arrival at C. U. was Charley Moutenot, the gray-haired Frenchman counted upon to bear the passing brunt and to spark the running attack this year. He worked as a fisherman hauling nets on the South Jersey Coast all summer and is in top condition. Joe Guyon, the Indian backfield ace, is reported ready for the first time in his varsity career—spotted with injuries last year which kept him out.

Bergman's line outlook has been considered considerably brightened by the fact that he has unearthed two sophomore prospects, Mike Cherello, of Morristonwn, N. J., and Jack Schroder, of Easton, Pa., who will aid and abet regular guards, Co-Captains Al Calabrese and Art Sabo. The Cardinals will stick to calisthenics and signal practice for a week, working twice a day.

Coach Frank Dobson's outlook at Maryland is rather dark at present because of the lack of dependable reserves and a passer to replace Charlie Weidinger and Jim Meade, lost through graduation.

The passing duties may fall to a youngster up from the 1938 freshman squad, Mearle Duvall, whose quarterbacking may become a vital part of the Terps' attack this fall.

The Maryland squad will work twice daily—calisthenics in the morning and fundamentals in the afternoon—until school opens September 18. The squads of George Washington University and Georgetown, which began work Friday, will continue light drills two more weeks also, waiting until cooler weather for contact work.

Touring U. S. Trackmen 'Found' in France

New York, Sept. 5 (AP).—Dan Ferris, secretary of the Amateur Athletic Union, received word today the touring American track and field team was in Nice, France.

Word from the team of 10 athletes came in a cablegram through the State Department from Manager Guy Stollenwork, of Memphis, who asked for additional funds to get the team home. Ferris said he sent the money through the American consul and suggested the team sail on the Rex the latter part of the week. Ed Weir, of the University of Nebraska is coach of the team.

Here We Go Again With Marathon Softball

Within the next two days a pair of attacks will be made on the marathon softball record set by Roosevelt and Powell Boys Clubs last week. Two unlimited teams at Taft-Burroughs playground will make the first onslaught on the 115-inning mark today, starting at shortly after 5 a. m. and continuing as fast as possible until dark. The Early Birds will battle the Night Owls.

Giants Blank Phillies, 6-0; Melton Hurls

New York Maintains ½ Game Hold on 4th Place; 4th Win in Row

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 5.—The Giants blanked the Phillies, 6 to 0, today behind the steady nine-hit pitching of "Stringbean" Cliff Melton to stretch their winning streak to four straight and maintain their half-game hold on fourth place in the National League.

Although they were able to collect only seven hits off the combined hurling of Ray Harrell and Walter Kirksieck, the Giants bunched four of these in the first inning for five runs to put the game on ice. Frank Demaree's homer with one aboard featured this splurge.

D. C. Women Advance In Golf Tourney at White Sulphur Springs

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Sept. 5.—Washington's hopes for the Mason and Dixon Women's golf title, Marion Brown, of Manor, and Mrs. Betty Meckley, Indian Spring, advanced with one-sided victories into the second round here today.

Miss Brown was just 3 over par in winning nine of 10 holes played against Mrs. M. J. Kneisel, of Lakewood, Ohio, for a 9-and-8 victory. Mrs. Meckley defeated Mrs. H. D. Everett, Charleston, W. Va., 7 and 6.

One Over Par

Miss Traung shot one-over-par golf on the outgoing nine to eliminate Cecilia Einstein, of Jackson Heights, N. Y., 9 and 8. Miss Guilfoil, the 1937 titleholder, duplicated the victory with a 9 and 8 defeat of Mrs. E. F. Buescher, of Willoughby, Ohio.

Donkey Ball Game, Old-Timer Clash on Ballston Schedule

Tomorrow night at the same hour Clark C. Griffith sends his colorful old timers into action against Lou Blue's Baseball School nine in a game that donates 50 per cent of its receipts to the Johnny Stone Day Fund and the remaining 50 per cent to Arlington Youth Center.

Donkeys imported from Bethesda, Md., will endeavor to upset the politicians tonight and rule a 3-to-1 favorite to do so.

Numbered among Griffith's starting players are former Washington club favorites in Walter Johnson, Sammy Rice and Joe Judge, all of whom are to start. Nick Altrock, popular comedian-coach of the Washington club, will be called in from Philadelphia to participate in the festivities.

Griffith announced yesterday that Jimmy and Billy Robertson, twin brothers and Griffith's ball playing nephews, will be started by the old timers at second base and shortstop, respectively. Both were key men on the Roosevelt High School nine this past year.

Neal, Baseball Scout Who Found McCarthy, Dies From Stroke

By the Associated Press

Neal was connected with professional baseball 25 years—since 1915, when he was a scout for the Philadelphia Phillies, who, that year, won their only National League pennant.

From 1919 until last fall, he was vice president and general manager of the Louisville American Association club. He retired following sale of the club to Tom Yawkey, Donie Bush and Frank McKinney.

Neal had a reputation as one of baseball's shrewdest scouts. His most notable contributions to major leagues were Earle Combs, Billy Herman and Joe McCarthy, now manager of the New York Yankees and a former Louisville manager.

He helped organize and played first base in the old Louisville City League, believed to be the second of its kind in the Nation. As captain of the team he received his nickname, "Cap."

He induced Barney Dreyfuss, then connected with a Louisville distillery, to accept the presidency of the league and thus introduced to baseball the man who later became owner of the Louisville club and still later president of the Pittsburgh Pirates.

12 More Teams Enter Sandlot Tourney Here

National Event Will Begin Saturday With 24 Teams Entered

Twelve sandlot baseball teams, winners of their sectional National Amateur Federation tournaments all over the country, will be added today and tomorrow to the list of competitors for the national tourney starting here Saturday. The total then will be 24 teams, 13 contenders including the District of Columbia titlist, Heurich Brewers, having already been decided.

Outstanding of the teams still outside the fold is the Altes Lager Club, of Detroit, which marched to a victory in the 1938 tournament. Altes is engaged in a playoff for the Motor City title at present and its participation depends entirely on the outcome.

The 12 out-of-town teams already holding their section championships are Naval Training Station, of Illinois; Kayser Hosiery, of New York; New Haven Railroad, of Massachusetts; Mayflower Hotel, of Akron, Ohio; Rosenblums, of Cleveland, Ohio; Scenic Gardens, of Michigan; Ted Nickle Plate, of Indiana; Colonial No. 3, of Pennsylvania; Wierton Steel, of West Virginia; General Motors, of Michigan; Swissville Club, of Pennsylvania, and Ficca's, of Connecticut.

Action will start at 9:30 Saturday morning and last through more than a week. The affair will be officially inaugurated Saturday afternoon at 12:30 with Heurich meeting an opponent in one half of a double-header and the Detroit club meeting a foe in the nightcap at Griffith Stadium. The Ellipse, Washington Monument grounds, St. Elizabeths, Fort Myer, Walter Reed and Naval Air Station diamonds will be used throughout the struggle. Draws for first-round opponents will be made Friday at noon by "Sunny Jim" Downey, federation president.

'Finger' to Be Put On N. Y. Fighters Guilty of Fouls

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 5.—The New York State Athletic Commission altered its rule slightly today to make it easier for fight fans to understand what is going on when a boxer is penalized for fouling. Hereafter the referee, when he takes away a round bcause of a foul, will be required to stand in the ring near the judges and point to the penalized fighter while informing the judges of the penalty.

The fans will be able to see that gesture. Then to make it more certain, the commissioners ruled that the announcer who collects the decision slips, must first announce what rounds were taken away from either fighter on penalties and the reason for the penalty before he announces the decision.

Smith, Murphy Sweep Virginia Net Tourney

Washington Tennis Aces Win Doubles; Smith Takes Singles

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Sept. 5.—Two Washington tennis aces made a grand sweep of the Northern Virginia Open tennis tournament finals here this afternoon.

Alphonso Smith, defending champion, defeated Dick Murphy, also of Washington, for the singles honors and then the two teamed to win the doubles in easy fashion from Bobby Leitch and Dick Johnson, of Richmond.

Smith dropped the first set to Murphy in the singles, 4—6, but took the next three, 6—2, 6—1, 6—4.

Records Wins Midget Race

Any ill feeling they might have harbored for each other over their crash last week were wiped out last night by Rex Records and Harry Felton at the Capitol speedway when they drove a five-lap "grudge" race that was an axle-to-axle affair until the last 10 feet when Records forged ahead to win.

The race between Records and Felton stole the show from the 25-lap feature event, which was won by Ernie Gesell, of Inwood, Long Island, in 7 minutes, 3.09 seconds. He piloted Paul Russo's red Offenhauser ahead of Red Redmond in the twenty-fourth lap, taking a long chance on the track made slick by heavy rains. Slightly more than 3,000 fans turned out to brave the chill that hung over the midget racing track.

42 Become U. S. Citizens—And Neutral

Half Natives of Nations At War; Former German Blames Hitler

American citizenship—and neutrality—were extended to 42 men and women who said good-by to allegiance to 15 foreign countries in Naturalization Court yesterday.

Half of the new citizens were natives of nations now at war. They stood before Justice Adkins and answered routine questions, then raised their hands to swear fealty to the United States.

Happy over her new nationality was blonde Gerda Marie Bruckman, 24-year-old former George Washington University student, who has lived 18 years in Washington. She is a graduate of Roosevelt High School.

Ex-German Blames Hitler

"I'm very glad. I know that," said Miss Bruckman. "I feel better, being an American citizen." She said America "ought to stay out" of the war, for which she blamed Chancellor Hitler of her native Germany. "Maybe he has been built up to look like a bigger and worse man than he really is," she said. "Some of the things he did for Germany were good. But if he had not invaded Poland there would not be a war now."

Her neutrality views were echoed by William Karl Kuhner, 32, painter and paperhanger who came to this country from Germany after learning his trade 15 years ago. "I hope the United States will not be involved," he said. Kuhner, whose wife also became an American citizen yesterday, said he was in doubt about the blame for the war.

Their Problem Is Cotton, Not So Soft

Secretary Wallace — Sarda Malik — Henry Grady — Harry Brown

18 Million Here Hyphenated To Belligerents

Are Native Born or Have At Least One Parent From Warring Nations

Approximately 18,000,000 residents of the United States were born in one of the countries now at war or have at least one parent native to one of the belligerent nations, a survey of Census Bureau statistics revealed yesterday.

The 1930 census showed 19,364,281 persons in these categories, but bureau officials point out that immigration restrictions will cause a drop in the foreign-born classification in the 1940 figures.

Great Britain, with its dominions, leads the belligerents in the number of its sons and daughters in this country. The 1930 census reported 1,402,032 persons here who were born in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Described as of British parentage were 2,952,386.

(If either parent is British and the other American-born, the census classes the child as of British parentage. In cases of mixed foreign parentage the classification is according to the father's nationality.)

1,278,421 Born in Canada

Born in Canada, which has affirmed its intention to "stand side by side" with Great Britain, were 1,278,421 persons covered in the 1930 census, while 2,058,924 more were listed as of Canadian parentage.

Polish-born residents in America numbered 1,268,583 nine years ago, and an additional 2,073,615 were of Polish parentage.

Natives of Germany, including Austria but not Czecho-Slovakia, totaled 2,069,728. There were 5,757,918 more persons of German parentage.

100 Become Ill, 5 Go to Hospital, At Church Picnic

Five persons, including a doctor and his wife, were recovering last night in Providence Hospital from illness believed due to poisonous food. There were an estimated 100 victims at a church picnic held Monday at Avenue, Md., 15 miles from Leonardtown.

All five are improving, it was said, but two were so violently ill they had to be taken to the hospital in an ambulance. Three were treated yesterday in the St. Mary's Hospital at Leonardtown. The majority of those affected, however, were reported to have received medical aid in their homes or at physicians' offices.

Approximately 500 men, women and children went to Avenue on Labor Day for the annual outing of Holy Angels' Church. Nearly 200 were believed to be from Washington.

Virtually every doctor in St. Marys County worked all night Monday and yesterday morning to relieve suffering of the afflicted. Dr. F. F. Grennwell, of Leonardtown, said the condition of those he treated was "distressing, but not serious."

Federal Heating Contract Awarded

The Federal Works Agency yesterday awarded a $65,870 contract to the Mechanical Construction & Equipment Co., of Baltimore, Md., for an extension of the central heating plant for Federal buildings, to the new Social Security, Railroad Retirement and Federal Office buildings.

The new extension will operate through pipes running from the central system at Twelfth and C streets southwest through a tunnel to the new buildings in the area bounded by C and D streets, Second, Third and Fourth streets, and Virginia avenue northwest.

Fair Tomorrow Marks 2d Year Of Greenbelt

City Fathers to Judge Babies, Beauties, Etc., In 3-Day Celebration

The city fathers of Greenbelt, Md., issued an invitation yesterday to all and sundry to "come to the fair." The model community will stage a "Little World's Fair" tomorrow, Friday and Saturday in celebration of its second birthday, they announced.

The town's 30 organizations have decorated the school auditorium, set up booths and planned displays and contests. Babies, beauties, needlework, cooking, pictures, flowers and dancers are only a few of the entries to be judged.

Miss Doris Dungan's girls' class will put on an acrobatic show each day and there will be music by the Washington Gas Light Co. Band and the Greenbelt Chamber Group. At 8:15 p. m. Saturday the Greenbelt Players will produce the medieval French farce, "Pierre Patelin"—the source of that classic phrase, "Let us return to our muttons."

Participating organizations are as follows: American Legion Post, No. 147; Athletic Association, Better Buyers Club, Boy Scout Troop No. 202, Boy Scout Mothers, Camera Club, Catholic Ladies Club, Consumers Service, Inc.; Credit Union, Cub Scouts, flower exhibit committee, Frank Harper's Marionettes, garden club, Girl Scouts, Greenbelt public health department, Greenbelt recreation department, Greenbelt churches, Greenbelt Players, gun club, health association, home makers, Mothers Club, Parent-Teachers Association, radio club, singles club, U. S. postoffice at Greenbelt, vegetable exhibit committee and the WPA art project.

Delegates of 10 Nations Open Cotton Parley

Faced With Carryover Of 22 Million, Group Here to Seek Markets

A division of world markets, future production control, probable trade agreements and ways to increase cotton consumption are on the discussion schedule.

Although called by the Department of Agriculture, the conference is being actively participated in also by officials of the State and Commerce departments.

Secretary Wallace declared any increased use of cotton for military purposes during wartime is likely "to be much more than offset by decreased use for ordinary purposes."

"Also," he said, "the problem of transportation from exporting to importing countries has become acute."

Pointing to the world carry-over of 22,000,000 bales, Secretary Wallace traced the predicament of this country during the past few years as it has seen its position as the leading cotton grower jeopardized and lost by increased production by other nations.

He admitted that the cotton acre reduction program instituted during this Administration had led to belief that the United States was relinquishing its bid for world trade and also agreed that bounties paid cotton farmers had placed American cotton in an unfavorable position for world price competition.

That the time for world-wide "co-operation" on the problem is at hand he declared to be evident. As one of the weapons by which this co-operation might be secured he mentioned the huge stocks of around 1,000,000 bales now held in reserve in this country.

"If the huge stocks we are holding were dumped on the market," he declared, "the damage to cotton producers everywhere would be disastrous.

"From the standpoint of their own interests alone, it seems that all cotton exporting nations will wish to help avoid a breakdown of this country's program."

Some of the delegates were reported ready to ask that the conference adjourn today and meet later when the tension in Europe subsides.

Secretary Wallace has said that if an agreement between nations can be put into operation the export subsidies would be abandoned.

Central Businessmen To Hear L. C. Garnett

The first fall luncheon meeting of the Central Business Association will be held tomorrow at 12:30 p. m. in the New Colonial Hotel at Fifteenth and M streets northwest. Guest speaker will be Leslie C. Garnett, former U. S. attorney for the District. A group of 24 new members, including Sefton Darr, president of the District Bar Association, will be initiated.

Lample, CAA Flier, And Girl Hurt in Baltimore Crash

Baltimore, Sept. 5 (AP).—A Civil Aeronautics plane crashed in a beanpatch on the outskirts of the city late today, injuring the pilot, Christopher Lample, of Baltimore, and his passenger, Miss Elizabeth Colleran, 34, of Baltimore.

Lample was assigned several months ago to the Washington office of CAA after serving in Kansas City. He entered Government service in 1927 with the old aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce.

Both were taken to St. Joseph's Hospital with possible fractured skulls. Physicians said Lample, an inspector for the C. A. A., was more seriously injured than Miss Colleran.

Witnesses said the high-wing monoplane crashed after a steep bank over the hilly plot of ground. It dug a wing into the ground and overturned. It was demolished.

After the crash Louis M. Rawlins, jr., Logan Field manager, reported it to Washington. He said C. A. A. inspectors left at once for the scene.

Attendants at Logan field said Lample radioed a few minutes before the crash that he was en route to the field from Newark, N. J., and asked that a taxicab be called.

U. S. Bar to Discuss Tomorrow's War's Effect on Neutrals

Impact of the war upon neutral nations and civilians will be discussed by the chairmen of 24 committees of the Section of International and Comparative Law of the American Bar Association at a meeting at 6:30 p. m. tomorrow at the University Club, William R. Vallance, chairman, announced yesterday.

Plans for participation in the American Bar Association meeting at Philadelphia next September will also be discussed.

Local officers of the section are Vallance, John T. Vance, David E. Grant, Howard S. Leroy and James Oliver Murdock. The following council members have been invited to the meeting: Frederick K. Beutel and John H. Wigmore, of Chicago; Edward W. Allen, of Seattle; John P. Bullington, of Houston, Tex., and Phanor J. Eder, of New York.

Mrs. Pullian Asks Divorce at Rockville

In Circuit Court at Rockville, Md., Mrs. Dorothy L. Pullian yesterday asked an absolute divorce from Thomas C. Pullian, of Bethesda, claiming she was deserted more than three years ago. The bill states that they were married April 17, 1935, and have no children. Attorney Kenneth Lyddane, of Rockville, represents the plaintiff.

Fear of Gestapo Stifles Slovak Ire, Say Observers

Bratislava, Slovakia, Sept. 5 (AP).—Observers asserted tonight that Slovak resentment against German military rule was being stifled only by fear of the Gestapo, Nazi secret police.

The Hlinka Guard, semimilitary arm of the single Slovak party, has been merged with the Gestapo and an undisclosed number of Slovaks have been arrested.

There was no cheering as Slovaks solemnly boarded troop trains for the front. Unofficial but well informed sources expressed belief that the Slovaks were being placed between German first and third lines to prevent desertions.

Food sales have been curtailed. Pork, veal, bacon, canned goods, dried fruit, chocolate and cocoa are unavailable and butter and sugar have been rationed.

Trucker Dies in Plunge Off 125-Ft. Va. Cliff

Jurors to Probe Fatal Beating; Will Examine 3

A coroner's jury this morning will investigate the fatal beating August 28 of John J. Purcell, 50, of 3848 Thirty-fourth street, Mount Rainier, Md.

Purcell died at Casualty Hospital of a fractured skull last Friday after he had been found unconscious in a house in the 400 block G street northwest. He had been beaten with a cane, according to police.

Two men and a woman will be brought from the District Jail to appear at the hearing. John J. Harris, 25, was charged with assault with intent to kill; Herbert Harris, 35, his brother, was charged with assault with a dangerous weapon, as was Nellie Harlow, alias Nellie Harris, 30. The three lived at the G street house and were held to the grand jury last week before Purcell's death.

According to Detective Sergt. William J. Liverman, Purcell became involved in an argument.

Trial of Weiss Opens on Federal Mail Fraud Count

New Orleans, Sept. 5 (AP).—Federal prosecution of Seymour Weiss, hotel magnate, and four others, on mail fraud charges, opened today with a Government attorney's assertion a "full confession" obtained from one of the defendants would be used to obtain conviction.

The trial was the first of many growing out of Federal investigations which began with the Louisiana State University scandals and resignation of Richard W. Leche as Governor in June.

Rene A. Viosca, outlining the Government case, said J. Emory Adams, a defendant, had made a full confession in the case in which the Government alleges Weiss, Adams and three others divided $75,000 obtained from the State university by selling it hotel furnishings the school already owned.

5 Police to Attend Traffic Officer School

Five Washington policemen yesterday were detailed to attend the third annual traffic officers' school at College Park, Md., from September 11 to 23.

The officers designated by the Commissioners are Lieut. J. E. Scott, Sergt. L. T. Johnson and Privates Abel Mann, J. R. Milsted and Lionel Couture.

WAR COMMUNIQUE. Oscar of the Hi Hat is planning a "Neutrality Cocktail." After one, you don't want to fight anybody. After the third, you can't. But Oscar says two "Neutralities" will be the limit—and no negotiation.

Dave Crocker, star accordionist of the Myer Davis organization, will join the Rainbow Room Orchestra on September 15. Rainbow's Director Milton Davis is plenty happy over the accession. Dave has played for many big society parties in Washington and up in the "hunt country."

ELEGANT PARTIES APPROACH. With the Mayflower's annual "champagne and orchids" fiesta scheduled for next Tuesday, September 2, and the opening of the Shar-Zad Room due on the following Friday, next week is taking on a positively glamorous aspect.

The Lounge Riviera and Madrillon managements are also figuring on fancy parties to celebrate the opening of the fall season. These will probably take place around October 1. It's likely that the Madrillon fete will be graced by some fine authentic Spanish talent. The Rainbow Room may have a "fall opening party," too. If so, it'll be during the last week of September or before the middle of October. The Shoreham Blue Room is due for a "formal opening" also.

Bill McCune and his band from New York's Essex House will be featured at the Shar-Zad Room. This unit has played at many of Manhattan's smartest bistros, has also made a splendid name for itself on the radio for the last five years. Its music is highly stylized, with plenty of vocalistics and a particularly tricky brass section. Bill describes it as "Music of the Future."

Highly gilded artists of national fame will appear at the Mayflower's "champagne and orchids" fete. There'll be the Hartmans, originators of ballroom dance satire and one of the highest priced dance teams in the country. Also Patricia Ryan, the young singer who scored in "New Faces." She will remain in the Mayflower Lounge indefinitely with Dick Koons' band. Add Giovanni, the "world's greatest pickpocket" who's likely to relieve you of your valuables. Don't worry. You'll get them back before check-paying time comes.

Thunder and Cloudburst News. Bamboo Gardens' Al Norton was marooned in a couple of feet of water (nasty stuff!) down in Virginia on Monday and couldn't make the first show. Ditto for Marian Dawn . . . The 120-foot mast used by the Shoreham Terrace's aerial act, was struck by lightning in Monday's storm. Didn't do a bit of harm. The mast just absorbed the electricity like a lightning rod.

INDOOR OPENING. Lou Williams and his orchestra got away to a beautiful start at Maryland Gardens last evening. The indoor opening of the gardens marks an innovation keeping this attractive spot open for the fall and winter. The pretty Countess de Bournat will remain in the dual capacity of hostess and seeress.

WAR CORRESPONDENCE ACROSS TABLES. At Mayfair, I think I'll enlist as a typhoid carrier . . . In the Lounge Riviera. I'm going to start a war of my own if my girl doesn't stop dancing with that pocketbook hung over her shoulder . . . At O'Donnell's Farms as it thundered. Here comes Hitler . . . In the Neptune Room. I was turned down on physical at Annapolis, but I bet I wouldn't have any such luck in the draft . . . In the Brown Derby. I wonder if I can get married and accumulate a couple of kids before the United States gets into this fracas.

CIRCUS WEEK is being celebrated on the Shoreham Terrace. Besides the "Queens of the Air" and their breathtaking performance, there's Billy Dale one of the best clown-jugglers who ever cavorted in with Barnum and Bailey. Billy's a great showman. He scares, surprises and amuses the ringsiders within an inch of their lives, scored a tremendous success. Another big hit at the Monday eve show (when the Queens of the Air were rained out) was Barnee's piano and violin soloing. It should be a regular part of the show.

Just five more nights to dance at Glen Echo. And to the high-tension rhythms of Cecil Golly's orchestra, one of the most popular of the "big name bands" that have played at Echo this season.

U. S. Building League Meets September 25

Annual Convention, the 47th, Will Be Held At Atlantic City

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Savings and loan executives, appraisers, attorneys and public supervisors of these institutions, from here and elsewhere, together with Federal Home Loan Bank presidents, will assemble in Atlantic City, September 25-29, for the forty-seventh annual convention of the United States Building and Loan League.

The league's directors will meet September 23, and the executive council and other committees will hold sessions the two days before the formal conventoin opening. September 26 will also see the fifth annual convention of the Society of Residential Appraisers, an outgrowth of the league, which has a membership drawn from appraisers in this country and Canada.

Subjects scheduled for discussion during the week include the scope of public housing in America, trends in interest and dividend rates, supervisory powers over chartered financial institutions, trends and effects of the Federal Housing Administration, savings and loan trends, making loans for new home building, education for business responsibilities, possibilities of stabilizing real estate values, proving new building materials and real estate prospects for the coming year.

Problems of 1940

Besides members of Congress, Government agency officials, industrial leaders and merchandising experts, every session will hear representative savings and loan men discuss immediate problems confronting them in 1940. Among them will be several chairmen of special committees which have spent the past year studying such prbolems as home taxation, title charges on mortgages, construction loan policies and procedures, reserve credits and banking relations and economic policies.

The league's tenth annual advertising and business development contest will be staged in connection with the convention demonstrating methods by which several million dollars worth of advertising of the thrift and home financing business has been utilized. Winning exhibits will be judged by a committee of three advertising experts headed by Preston E. Reed, of the Financial Advertisers Association and specific points of excellence will be explained in a special session of those interested in advertising angles.

Producers' Council

President A. B. Tibbets of The Producers Council, Inc., announces acceptance of Stuart M. Crocker, vice president of the International General Electric Co., as chairman of the advisory board of the council, to fill the unexpired term of C. E. Wilson, executive vice president of General Electric Co.

Mr. Crocker brings to this position a wide acquaintance with the management and directors of important groups interested in building materials and many years of experience in the building industry. He became widely known in 1924 as an associate of Owen D. Young on the American delegation to the Exports Conference, which developed the Dawes Plan, and again in 1928 with Mr. Young in connection with the Paris Reparations Conference, which formulated the Owen D. Young Plan.

General Electric Official

In addition to his vice presidency of the International General Electric Co., Mr. Crocker was recently named manager of the air conditioning and commercial refrigeration department of General Electric Co. He will make his initial contact with activities of the Producers Council at its semiannual meeting in this city during the last week in September, where he will address the joint luncheon of The American Institute of Architects and the council.

The Producers Council is the national organization of manufacturers of buildnig materials and equipment operated to further the highest ideals in architecture and building construction and equipment. It was founded in 1921 and is affiliated with The American Institute of Architects. It comprises 68 manufacturers and associations of manufacturers.

It is felt that under Mr. Crocker's leadership, the advisory board will become a great influnece for progress not only in the council but in the entire industry.

Commodities Continue Climb In War Market

By the Associated Press

Commodity prices rocketed yesterday in a wild bull market, adding hundreds of millions of dollars to quoted values of farm products and industrial raw materials.

Many staples soared the top limits permitted for one trading session. Some veteran commodity men said it was the broadest concentrated buying scramble they had seen, exceeding World War markets. Action in key futures markets included:

Lead and Zinc—Up ¾ of a cent a pound.

All classes of livestock at Chicago advanced sharply. Steers and yearlings sold mostly 50 cents higher. Spring lambs were active at 40 to 65 cents higher levels, topping at $10. Best hogs went to $8, some classes gaining $1 a hundredweight.

Soaring Grains Are Halted by Price Limits

Wheat Highest in 1½ Years, Corn at Top Price Since January

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 5.—Overwhelmed by speculative buying at the outbreak of war, the grain market today was thrown into complete deadlock after prices had skyrocketed 3 to 5 cents a bushel—as high as Government and Exchange restrictions allow in one session.

Trading was at a standstill. Rules which have been put into effect the past six years to curb runaway speculative markets met their first real test. Because they prohibited prices from going any higher than the daily limits amounting to 5 cents in wheat and rye, 4 cents in corn and 3 cents in oats, they throttled trade.

Brokers with orders to buy millions of bushels of various grains were unable to execute them because few sellers were available who wanted to offer grain at even the maximum prices. Only a few sales took place. It was the first time in Exchange history that such a situation had developed. Only one price was quoted throughout the day for each of the 20-odd contracts in various grains and provisions which are traded.

Closing Prices

September wheat closed at 81¾, December 81⅞, May 82⅝, the highest in more than a year and a half. Corn closed at 53¾, 54⅝ and 57⅛ respectively, highest since January.

The war, which has forced suspension of trading in European grain markets and brought international wheat operations abroad largely under Government control, was the only factor in the trade. The deadlock in the futures market created a similar tie-up in the spot trade and very little actual grain changed hands.

Although there were no limits on price fluctuations in the spot market, with corn quoted about 6 cents a bushel higher than Saturday and wheat also sharply higher, dealers had difficulty in getting together. Sellers of actual grain were just as hesitant as sellers of futures. Cash dealers booked only 12,000 bushels of corn to arrive from the country and no wheat. Only 2,000 bushels of wheat and 3,000 bushels of corn were sold to shippers.

New York Banks Attach German Deposits There

New York, Sept. 5 (AP).—Leading New York banks today attached German government funds on deposit here, a high banking authority disclosed.

The seizure, which involved sums which may reach about $50,000,000 resulted from the termination by the American committee of short term creditors, of the 1931 "Standstill" agreement. Such termination makes obligations immediately payable. Similar action was taken by the British committee. Immediately thereafter, leading banks served attachments upon one another. However, they found most of the German cash here had been transferred to Swiss ownership.

Latest published figures indicated current outstanding credit lines to Germany in the United States totaled $81,000,000, of which about $65,000,000 was actually utilized, and that sum has been considerably reduced.

However, many of the German balances here had been transferred, in anticipation of today's action, to the name of the bank for international settlements, in Switzerland.

Business Loans Rise $58,000,000 in Week

By the Associated Press

The Federal Reserve Board reported tonight another sharp increase in commercial, industrial and agricultural loans of banks. Banks in 101 leading cities had $3,996,000,000 of such loans on August 30, an increase of $58,000,000 over the preceding week.

As in the preceding week, when a $26,000,000 increase was reported for the same banks, New York City accounted for most of the gain. In the last week, New York banks were responsible for $49,000,000 of the $58,000,000 increase.

Investors Rush Into War Stocks U. S. and Foreign Bonds Decline Sharply In Heaviest Bond Trading on Record

New York, Sept. 5.—Values soared and records of recent years fell today as investors rushed into American securities and commodities to place their hedge against the havoc of war. Anticipating that the pattern of price movements will be somewhat similar to that of the last war, the public and speculative traders combed the list for any and every stock that may reap a benefit from war orders. At the same time the softness of securities of more fixed earning power, such as bonds and preferred stocks, reflected selling by holders who wanted to place their funds in faster moving common stocks.

Highest grade bonds, such as those of the United States Government list, were also under pressure because of apprehension over a changed money market, which would bring higher prevailing interest rates and thus reduce the relative earning ability of fixed coupon obligations. Bonds of our Government were off in some cases more than a point. Periods of weakness in this type of security, the safety of which is unquestioned, are due strictly to the market's guess on the future of interest rates.

Whatever the cause, the volume of trading in bonds on the big board exceeded all previous records, amounting to $38,617,000. Nearby records were established for stocks. The turnover of 5,932,150 shares was the greatest since October 19, 1937. It was the largest for a rising market since July 18, 1933.

Gains From 5 to 20 Points

Gains of from 5 to 20 points were the rule for the so-called war babies, and there were cases of greater jumps, notably Wright Aero. which closed at 114, up 24 points. Bethlehem gained 14½. Du Pont 13½. International Harvester 10⅝, Chrysler 5¾, General Motors 5½, International Nickel 6¼, National Steel 8¾, Republic Steel 6⅝, Standard of New Jersey 5¾, Texas Corporation 7, United States Steel 13⅜ and Westinghouse 7½.

The markup in commodities was as sensational, but trading was at a stalemate because Government and exchange regulations limit the maximum fluctuations permitted on any one trading day. Thus when wheat jumped 5 cents a bushel at the opening, corn 4 cents, oats 3 cents and rye 5 cents, and few traders would sell at the new high prices, trading was virtually at a standstill.

Active buying in cotton lifted futures 38 to 52 points, or $1.90 to $2.60 a bale. Gains in other commodity futures included September rubber, 535 points; other rubber futures, the limit of 200 points; raw silk, 15 cents; copper, 150 points; tin, 365 to 650 points; lead, 60 to 65 points; zinc, 52 to 73 points; hides, 199 to 200 points; sugar, 25 points; coffee, 18 to 38 points; hogs, 75 cents to $1 a hundredweight; steers and yearlings, 50 cents up; spring lambs, 40 to 65 cents; cottonseed oil, 95 to 100 points, and Cocoa, 100 points. Many of these gains were the limits permitted.

Dealings in foreign exchange in New York were little more than nominal. Sterling was late in opening, as the only guide was the British control level of $4.02 on the buying side and $4.06 on the selling side. The local market reached its own adjustment at $4.07, down 13 cents below the previous low of the sequence of crises. The close was $4.06½. French francs dipped and Canadian dollars proved to be another vulnerable point.

Wall Street Busy

Wall Street went to work early and stayed late trying to keep pace with the sudden outburst of business brought on by the war. Stock exchange officials were at their posts well before the opening and all specialists have been ordered to be present on the trading floor today at 9:15. The stock clearing corporation, which normally closes at 4:55 p. m., extended the time for clearings to 10 o'clock tonight and lights burned late in most Wall street establishments.

When exchange officials made their check-up with specialists before the opening today it was apparent that the street was in for one of its biggest days in history. Volume for the first hour alone was 1,640,000 shares.

two inactive issues showed the greatest advances. Cuban American Sugar preferred jumped 27 points, and Wright Aeronautical, 24. Cuban American Sugar common had the distinction of one of the major percentage gains. At its close of 13 it was up 6⅝, thus more than doubling its previous price of 6⅜. As frequently happens when the rush is to equity securities, there is liquidation of preferreds in order to secure funds. Conspicous losses in preferreds included American Can, 11; American Smelting, 2½; American Tobacco, 5½; General Motors, 8¼, and Liggett & Myers, 13¼. But even among the preferreds there were exceptions, the senior stocks of Bethlehem, Republic, United States Steel and Armour moving ahead.

Republic Leads Activity

Republic Steel was the day's most active stock, closing up 6⅝. Anaconda followed with a jump of 8⅝. Kennecott gained 5⅜. Trading throughout the day was concentrated in the steels, nonferous metals, sugars, chemicals, textile and aviation shares. Store stocks were left behind and the utilities had few friends.

Illustrating the size of the trading in United States Government bonds on the big board, the turnover today was $48,986,000 par value whereas up to last Saturday the volume in such bonds for the year to date was only $77,585,00.

Federal Reserve officials continued to maintain an orderly market in United States Treasury securities, but the sharp downward trend of these obligations remained in evidence. Losses were held to a point or slightly more than that amount, with a few trades reported over-the-counter late in the day at further concessions. The era of artificial cheapness of money rates was considered to be over, and a mild rush to liquidate money-market obligations was indicated.

Federal Reserve Big Buyer

The Federal Reserve was the only important buyer. Names of sellers were requested on large blocks, with the result that such blocks were split into offerings of 25 bonds each, and the volume run up just the same. There was still no indication whether the Federal Reserve was buying for its own account, or for Federal Government agencies.

High grade corporation bonds remained weak, owing to their money market characteristics. The accumulated drop in long-term Treasury issues now is 5 to 6 points, but some of the best corporation issues are 8 to 10 points under recent highs. Speculative bonds began to come into demand, on the same considerations that lifted the equities division.

Foreign dollar securities showed broad changes in both directions, the issues of belligerents remaining weak, while the more speculative bonds of Latin-American defaulters strengthened. The bonds of European neutrals, like Belgium and Denmark, sold 2 to 9 points lower. The few trades in German bonds were at outright default levels, while Polish bonds showed recessions to 15 points.

No British Liquidation

Local bankers reported that they had seen no evidence of any liquidation of American securities by investors in Great Britain. It is assumed that war purchases made here by England will be paid for first by using the gold and bank balances already in this country and that liquidation will be delayed in order to take advantage of rising security prices.

Thus far, American industrialists report that foreign business is largely of the inquiry nature, with few orders developing. It is felt that it may be six months before the full effect of war buying will be noted, but in the meantime American plants are being stepped up to care for a rush of domestic orders. These are coming in as a result of firming prices and the prospect of some difficulty faced by concerns which have been allowing their inventories to run low.

By the time the warring nations are forced to turn to this country for munitions it is assumed that the present neutrality act will have been repealed, in accordance with the wishes of the President. Contracts with warring nations for airplanes cannot be filled at the present time, under the provisions of this act. However, shipments can be made to Canada, up to the time when the Dominion declares war, which may be tomorrow, and they can also be sent to Italy, Spain or any of the other neutrals.

Cotton Goods Market Keeps Pace With Rise in Futures

Broken were almost unanimously of the opinion that in the long run the war abroad will have a bullish effect on American cotton. Supporting this view, they said, were the abnormally small supplies of United States lint in the hands of foreign spinners.

Most of the buying came through Wall street and trade accounts although foreign interests also lent a hand. At the top of the day's price curve, however, profit taking clipped best quotations.

Mary Bernau Once Refugee, Dies Here at 85

Fled Danzig Strife With Parents When a Child

At the end of her life history rewrote itself for Mrs. Mary Bernau, 85, who died early yesterday in her home at 938 Virginia avenue southwest.

Mrs. Bernau was born in Danzig, the former Free City in the Polish Corridor over which Germany and Poland went to war. She came to Washington when a child.

When the German invasion began several days ago, Mrs. Bernau called her children to the bedside to observe:

Her parents set up a store at Eleventh and C streets northwest, which Mrs. Bernau later came to own. She used to tell her children how Washington had been a city of muddy streets when she arrived, and she had worked proudly for her family and for the city. Her husband, Lewis Bernau, who died in 1936 three weeks before his ninety-third birthday, was a member of the Association of Oldest Inhabitants.

Mrs. Bernau leaves a son, Archie F. Bernau, and a daughter, Katie Lillian Bernau, both of this city. Funeral services will be at 2 p. m. tomorrow at the Taltavull funeral home, with burial in Prospect Hill Cemetery.

As leader of speaking activities for the twelfth annual Chest campaign, Gorrell is entering his tenth year in the volunteer service of the Chest. During the last two years he served as volunteer chairman of the budget committee. He was also a member of the board of trustees and the executive committee of the Chest.

President May Drop October Trip West

The fast pace of developments in the war abroad and the necessity of taking steps in this country to meet problems which have arisen as a result of the conflict, has virtually made it impossible for the President to carry out plans for a trip to the West Coast next month.

White House officials would not say the trip was off. But the President has given it no consideration whatsoever in the last fortnight.

1 U. S. Warplane Still Missing on Flight to Panama

By the Associated Press

The War Department said last night all but one of the 30 pursuit planes which encountered a storm en route to the Canal Zone had been accounted for.

The missing plane was piloted by Lieut. H. A. Jenkins, of Montalba, Tex., a reserve officer on active duty, the department announced. Search for Jenkins will be resumed tomorrow, it was said.

Earlier reports from Cristobal, Canal Zone, said two pilots had been sighted on the beach near Playa de Madrel and that supplies had been given them, presumably dropped from a plane. A United Fruit liner will pick up the fliers at daybreak, it was added.

The Yorktown and two other steamers halted and swept the water with searchlights after the leap was reported but failed to find any trace of the body. The man had bought a one-way ticket to Baltimore on the vessel which had sailed from Norfolk.

Bristol, Va., Sept. 5 (AP).—Asserting that, "Congress made a great mistake in not passing the neutrality act" before its recent adjournment, Representative John W. Flannagan, jr., of the Ninth Virginia District, today expressed the opinion that "Congress should be called into special session for the sole purpose of passing legislation that will keep us at peace."

Chicago, Sept. 5 (AP).—Senator Robert A. Taft (Republican), of Ohio, said today he believed Congress, if called into special session, would repeal the arms embargo section of the neutrality law and permit belligerent nations to buy implements of war on a cash and carry basis.

President Follows War by Means Of Several Maps

By the Associated Press

Reporters, trooping into President Roosevelt's office for his press conference yesterday, were attracted first of all by a huge display of maps on a standard facing Mr. Roosevelt's desk. One was a map of Europe. Thum-tacked at the edge of it was a large chart of Poland. Black lines showed the German position as of September 3, brown lines showed the Polish fortified line. It appeared that Mr. Roosevelt's official information was that the Nazis had broken through the Polish line from Slovakia. However, contrary to German claims as of September 3, the chart showed that the Nazi armies advancing from East Prussia and from Germany proper in an effort to meet and choke off the Polish Corridor were still 80 to 100 miles apart.

Steel Industry Mobilizes Ships For Ore Supplies

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 5.—Preparing for a war boom, the great American steel industry began sending out rush orders today for iron and steel supplies. With more than 300 ships available for the movement, a race began to bring iron ore from Minnesota, Northern Michigan, Wisconsin and Northern New York before the freeze-up of waterways in late November. Iron will crowd out wheat, the usual late season cargo.

Another important decision made today by executives responsible for some of the largest deliveries of tin and manganese from the Malay states, India and Russia was to operate their high seas fleets at their own risk.

This decision was reached as insurance rates soared to 5¼ per cent on American ships and 8 1-5 per cent on foreign carriers. The sinking of the Athenia and other ships were expected to push rates higher almost every day.

Anticipating the Great Lakes freeze-up in about 75 days, one of the largest steel companies ordered many of its vessels now tied up, pressed into the movement of iron from the northwest ore fields. This company has one of the largest fleets in operation on the lakes.

The Great Lakes Carriers' Association recently listed 327 vessels available for the movement with a combined capacity of 2,789,800 gross tons per trip.

Because of the extreme vulnerability of the Panama Canal, supplies of iron also are being rushed from Chile. This ore supplies tidewater plants on the east coast of the United States, particularly the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s Baltimore works, largest of them all.

Baltimore Jury Indicts Four in Mail Frauds

The Department of Justice and the Securities and Exchange Commission reported yesterday the return of an indictment by the Federal Grand Jury of the District of Maryland sitting at Baltimore, charging four individuals and the Allied Finance Corporation with violating the mail fraud statute and the Securities Act of 1933.

The indictment named as defendants A. G. W. Fritz of Baltimore, Maryland, president of the Allied Finance Corporation, Philip Birnbaum, an attorney, David Kohler, associated with M. D. Schreiber Co. and M. D. Schreiber of M. D. Schreiber Co., all of New York, N. Y., and the Allied Finance Corporation of Baltimore, Maryland. The indictment charged that the defendants devised a scheme and artifice to defraud numerous persons who purchased the stock of the Allied Finance Corporation.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Try your luck with the following questions taken from British matches and analyzed by Terence Reese, of British Bridge World.

1. Neither side is vulnerable, and the bidding is:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	2 ♢	Pass
3 ♢	Pass	?

South holds:

♡ 8 6
♣ A Q 5

This situation arose in a team-of-four match, and at one room South bid three no trump, in the other five diamonds. Which bid do you think is better judged and more likely to succeed?

2. The hands are:

North
♠ K Q 10 9 4
♡ A K 9 5
♣ 2
South
♠ 8 6 5
♡ 10 3
♢ K J 8
♣ 8 6 4 3

North is the dealer and not vulnerable. How should the bidding go between North and South, assuming no intervention?

Answers

1. Five diamonds. The issue is whether to play for game at no trump or in diamonds. A bid of four clubs is not wrong for the purpose of competition, for South will hardly want to bid a slam, and he should not stay out of game. With regard to the choice between three no trump and five diamonds, it seems to me that there is no occasion for the gambling bid. There must almost certainly be a good play for five diamonds, and there may well be none at all for three no trump; were the hand a little less strong, there would be a better case for three no trump. In the Gold Cup (British) final the wrong decision was made and there was a swing of 800 points, five diamonds made and three no trump down two, vulnerable.

2. Answer:

1 ♠	Pass	1 NT.	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
3 ♢	Pass	3 ♡	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

This hand occurred in the final of the Daily Telegraph Cup, and I don't think a single pair reached game; the cards lay well, and five was lay-down. Of course, game is far from certain on the combined holdings, but it is worth bidding. The critical bid of the auction, I suggest, is North's three diamonds. This constructive trial bid shows South that what little strength he has is in the right place; with clubs and diamonds reversed. South would pass three spades. If over two spades, North simply bids three spades, as happened at most tables, South cannot reasonably continue.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

LUTHER C. STEWARD, president, National Federation of Federal Employes, addressing the biennial convention of his organization in San Francisco, rips out a beautifully crisp sentence: "Conditions surrounding attempts to amend the Federal retirement acts have been highly interesting and extremely unsatisfactory." Otherwise from Mr. Steward: "The McCormack bill, authorizing unclassified laborers with more than five years' service to acquire a promotional status through noncompetitive examination has passed the House . . . and we shall continue our efforts at the next session to secure the final enactment of this meritorious measure" . . . "The entire subject of Q. S. and L. (quarters, subsistence and laundry—a big bother to Veterans' Administration employes) is a matter of constant study and activity on the part of national headquarters and with the continued co-operation of the central office of the Veterans' Administration still further liberalization may be anticipated" . . . "Among the Executive departments, the War Department has always presented the greatest difficulty in securing administrative adjustments due to the fact that this department has never had a central personnel control or a departmental personnel policy. This lack of coordination even extended into some of the bureaus of the War Department where dissimilar conditions existed in the same service." But the N. F. F. E. says it has brought some improvement and is optimistic . . . Although it proved impracticable to bring out the McCormack five-day week bill for consideration in either House or Senate, a substantial amount of work was done in developing sentiment for this measure which would equalize working conditions among civilian employes throughout the Federal service. Every possible effort will be made at the next session to secure favorable action on the bill."

SAM BARRETT, who made the Interior Department Recreation Association the best known Federal group in town, takes up the publicity for the PWA Recreation Association as follows: The PWRA, inaugurating its fall activities, was the first Federal employe group to get a bowling league under way when 12 teams lined up at the Chevy Chase alleys last night. Besides the teams, a large crowd of rooters were on hand. Representing the various offices of the PWA, are the following teams and captains: Accounts, Bill Routhier; legal, Harry McNerney; classification, Charlie King; mails and files, Jim Leavey; statistics, Jack Coryell; personnel, Bob Walter; projects, Ed Kenny; Administrative "A," Bud Simpson; Administrative "B," A. R. Baker; engineering "Grays," Larry Beckett; engineering "Blues," Jack Conner, and engineering "Browns," Ed Fisher.

IN A MESSAGE to the N. F. F. E.'s biennial convention, President Roosevelt spoke hopefully for the gains which he himself was instrumental in making for employes. "It is my sincere hope—in which I know your organization fully joins—that the immediate future will see not only consolidation of present gains, but further expansion of the competitive civil service system." And regardless of what later was done against the President's executive Order of June 24, 1938, the motives behind its action were high and encouraging to all friends of the merit system and good government.

"I AM ONE who believes that you cannot have good government with a spoils system. Public employes must be selected upon merit. They must be selected because of their qualifications for public service, not because of services rendered to a political faction or party. They should be retained if they render honest and efficient service. It is for this reason that I devote so much time to the civil service. It is a system in which public servants are employed upon merit and retained only during satisfactory service."—Rep. Robert Ramspeck, (Democrat), of Georgia, before the N. F. F. E. convention yesterday.

MUTE AND JOLTS

ADRIANA

By George Dyer

A Story of Love and Intrigue in Vineyard Sound

CHAPTER 35

A PARTIAL answer to this question came almost at once, while I was fingering the gate in hopes it was not securely fastened, I heard voices and movement in the building (the wall of which was not twenty feet from the fence), and jumped back just in time to miss being caught by the spurt of light which issued from an opened door. I crouched back beside the fence (there was nothing you could call cover anywhere along this side of the enclosure) and prayed that no one would happen to turn a flashlight in my direction.

DYER

The door was a big one, and double, and I could see Mr. Raskin pushing on one half while the watchman handled the other. Then the two came out and the promoter looked on while his man flung open the gate in the wire. After which they both vanished into the building, leaving the gate gaping.

My first temptation to pop inside was squelched by better judgment. A fairly bright light from the door lay across the opening from one side to the other. It was certainly in plain view of the people in the buiding. Better wait.

The churn of an electric motor began behind those glowing panes, and the groan of some sort of machinery, perhaps a winch. A shapeless shadow fell on the rails between the door and the fence, and was immediately followed by the black stern of a boat, being slowly rolled out on a wheeled cradle.

I lay on my stomach, pressed tight against the cold mesh, and watched and listened with all my eyes and ears. From what I could make out, as it emerged and lumbered down the beach, the craft was a motor cruiser, but it was like no cruiser I'd ever seen. It had queer lines, but suggested speed in every one of them. There was no cabin, nothing in fact above the deck but a windshield and cover about twice the size of a roadster. The hull was perhaps 50 feet long, and extremely streamlined. The timbers of the cradle made it impossible for me to tell whether it was stepped or not.

As the stern took the water, the churning stopped, and so did the progress of the boat. Mr. Raskin and another man, tall and not the watchman, appeared in the gate and walked down the tracks to the craft. They were talking hard, but in such low tones that I could understand nothing. Mr. Raskin stood under the uptilted bow of the boat, with his flashlight turned down on the sand and one hand raised to lean against the hull. He was apparently orating to the other, as he had to us the day before. The back of the other man was turned toward me, so that I could not judge from his expression the promoter's effect.

AFTER A TIME, some decision seemed to have been reached, and Mr. Raskin called back into the building to the watchman.

"We're going out," he said. "I want you along."

Big Jack appeared in the doorway.

"O. K." he growled.

"After we get on board," went on Mr. Raskin. "Let us into the water until I give you a holler to stop. Then come on down and I'll nose in and pick you up. But shut the place up good before you leave, I don't want anybody snooping around in there, if anybody should happen by."

"O.K." answered the watchman, and added: "No trouble about that. You know it don't matter whether I'm here or not. You know it'll be just too bad if anybody tried to get in. I'll be along in about five minutes."

With this cryptic and not encouraging statement, the watchman turned into the building. The two men on the beach climbed nimbly up a ladder on the cradle and disappeared into the boat. The motor hummed again, the cradle creaked into motion, and the long dark hull slid out into the water. Presently a hail from the boat stopped the machinery. The watchman came out through the door, and walked off inside the fence toward the far end of the enclosure, carrying with him the only light in the vicinity.

Now was my chance, and I took it without a moment's hesitation. The watchman's last words could mean only one thing; he was going to turn the juice into the fence, and God help the man who laid hold on it while he was away. But here, for a short moment, the gate was open, in darkness and deserted.

Adriana had been right. These guys were going to do something offshore, but whatever it was, I had no way of following a boat like that on a night like this. I couldn't even imagine what they'd be able to do, wandering around in Vineyard Sound in a thick fog. However, it was their affair; mine was to use to the best advantage this beautiful chance to have the plant of the Sea Reduction Corporation to myself for what might be several hours. I could get inside now; in a few moments it would be impossible. Once inside, I should be pretty dumb if I couldn't figure some way to get out again, when I'd seen all I wanted to. So I jumped to my feet, cut through the gate, doubled back inside the enclosure, and went into hiding behind the far corner of the building nearest the creek. It turned out to be as easy as that . . .

Shortly, the glow of the watchman's light returned, and I heard him slam the gates. I put my hand against the rough concrete wall of the building with a thrill of satisfaction. Now it was they who were outside, and I who was in. The plant was mine, by all points of the law.

Then I heard Big Jack speak out in his bass growl.

"Keep guard!" he said, as if to the fence.

I PEERED around the corner, but could see nothing except the watchman's light receding down the beach. There came to me on the damp breeze an unaccountable noise of movement which still seemed to be inside the enclosure, but this was swallowed in the muttering of a motor off the beach. I heard the engine steady into a roar, and then throttle down to idling speed. But in the instant when the gas had been fed into it full it sounded like the motors of a transport plane. I judged the boat must be nothing but powerplant from one end to the other.

The watchman's light was motionless by the water's edge, and the speedboat was presumably feeing its way in to pick him up, when my attention was abruptly called back to my own position. The noise of movement I had heard before was approaching. It sounded curiously like sniffing, and soft fast footfalls in the sand. My eyes came back to the enclosure, and I could make out a low shapeless shadowform working its way down the inside of the fence along the path I had taken from the gate. I ducked back around the corner, my mind whirling and the hair beginning to crawl on the back of my neck. What the devil had the watchman left behind him?

Softly I began to inch my way southward close to the wall of the building. I had perhaps made twenty feet when whatever was on my track turned the corner, glided toward me, and then stopped. The form broke up into two low shadows.

Dangerous as I knew it was to show a light, I had to see what I was up against. I reached into my pocket (I'll admit with a somewnat trembling hand), pulled out the little flashlight Adriana had put into it, and shot the beam at the shadows.

They snapped into solid being as two gigantic police dogs, crouched side by side on the sand and just about to spring as one dog. The expression on their black snarling faces, and in the four eyes which returned greenly the light of the flash, told me that as far as they were concerned, I was on the spot.

My first thought was: "If the brutes give tongue, I'm lost."

BUT THEY uttered no sound, only slowly began to close in on me, creeping so low that their bellies nearly dragged the ground. They had evidentlly been trained to attack first and ask questions afterwards.

And suddenly, with the most unpleasant clarity, I saw again the ripped open throat of that unfortunate Jap, and knew exactly how he had been done to death.

As I've said before, dogs and I usually get on together in a civilzed fashion. But this was a far different matter from my just-as-unexpected meeting with The MacGlashan and his brother, Craigie. It was night now, and every line of these two animals told me they were killers by their deepest instincts. I knew from the moment the light fell on them that it was going to be me or them, with the odds plenty in favor of it's being them.

They not only had the advantage of numbers, and were better armed, but together they had the advantage of weight. Besides that, they were supported; one yip out of them would bring Mr. Raskin and his murderous-looking assistant on the run.

So I took the only course open to me. I set my shoulders against the wall of the buildings, braced my feet, tried to contain my fear (and the smell they say you give off with it), told the dogs in a low angry voice that they ought to be ashamed and to lie down at once, and slowly (shifting the light to keep it on them) put my hands on my chest.

They did stop, a little bluffed out for the moment, but they did not lie down, and their masks remained blackly wrinkled and their tails rigid. I saw their eyes wink in the beam as they looked askance at each other. Then the larger of the two began to creep forward again. His mate kept at his shoulder.

They were perhaps 15 feet away, and about to take off in a leap for my throat when I had an inspiration and did something which really checked them.

My free hand had met cold metal on the front of my jersey—the tiny nickle "adent" whistle Adriana had hung there just before I left the boat. Instantly I put it to my lips and blew a long blast with all the power of my lungs. The silly peanut roaster squeal seemed scarcely strong enough to carry to the fence, but it did the only thing I really hoped that it would. It stopped those two drooling-mouthed devils in their tracks. It was something they'd never heard before; it puzzled them; they cocked their heads and crouched motionless, not quite sure whether to leap on their meat or not.

I think that's all I hoped I could do with the whistle. The yawl lay a good three-quarters of a mile off. Even supposing The MacGashan heard it, and could reach the shore before these dogs had quite killed me, what could he do but run up and down outside that fence and protest noisily while the brutes inside finished their work?

2 D. C. Persons From Athenia Known Safe

Jane Sunderland and John McLeod Found; Word of 4 Awaited

Hearts leaped up in two Washington homes yesterday when the news arrived that Miss Jane Sunderland and John McLeod, passengers on the sunken Athenia, were safe.

John McLeod, 14, of 4544 Conduit road northwest, was brought into Galway early in the day, according to State Department dispatches. His father, Donald McLeod, waited anxiously for word of his wife, and two daughters, Betty Jean, 17, and Dorothy May, 15, who are still unreported. No word has yet been received of survivors brought to Irish ports.

Miss Sunderland, daughter of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. A. H. Sunderland, of 2101 Connecticut avenue, apparently was brought to Galway, Scotland, yesterday by the Norwegian steamer Knute Nelson. Her name appeared as "Jane Sutherland" on the list received from Ambassador Kennedy by the State Department, but officials pointed out it could not refer to Mrs. Jessie Sutherland, another Athenia passenger who had already been reported safe at Glasgow.

Texans Safe

Further evidence that the name referred to Miss Sunderland was found in the names of four other girls, known to be traveling with her, which appeared next on the list. They were Miss Alice Newman, Miss Bobbie Halbert, Miss Anne Moore (the daughter of Col. George Moore of Texas) and Miss Hilda Hase (daughter of Mrs. William F. Hase, of Texas).

Maj. Gen. Sunderland had already received a cablegram to the effect that their daughter had reached her lifeboat station safely on the stricken vessel.

Marylanders Rescued

Others from nearby cities reported safe last night were Joan E. Hecht, of Pikesville, Md., William Buchanan, believed to be the son of Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Buchanan, of Danville, Va., and Thomas J. Keating, of Centerville, Md.

No address was given for Buchanan, whose parents said they did not know he had booked passage on the Athenia.

Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, author and editor of the National Hostorical Magazine, was in southern France when her office in the D. A. R. Building here had word from her. She expected to return in October, but any change in plans due to the war had not been heard here yesterday.

Mgr. Vaeth Reported on Liner

The Right Rev. Mgr. Louis C. Vaeth, of Our Lady of Victory Church, was said to be on the Manhattan, now nearing New York, according to a friend here who had heard the news in a roundabout way yesterday.

Mrs. Henry P. Brown, wife of the late former assistant attorney general of Texas, on a visit here was overjoyed to learn that her granddaughter, Miss Ann Baker, of Houston, was among the survivors of the Athenia. Mrs. Brown had come to Washington to meet Miss Baker on her return, and is staying with Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Hogue, of 125 Third street northeast. Miss Baker, 20, a graduate of the University of Texas, was in a party of six Texas girls touring Europe.

Other Washingtonians

Dr. Albert J. McCartney, pastor of Covenant First Presbyterian Church, cabled the church office yesterday from London "all safe," but made no mention of sailing. He and Mrs. McCartney and their son, Benjamin, who has been studying in Europe, are believed to be together in London. Another son, Noble, reached Washington yesterday.

Pastor Believed in Sweden

Dr. Carl C. Rasmussen, pastor of Luther Place Memorial Church, and his family are probably now in Sweden, according to Miss Hazel Anderson, parish worker, who received a letter from them dated August 28. The letter said Dr. Rasmussen would go directly to Sweden from Southampton, where he then was, instead of touring France and Germany as originally planned.

He intends to study four months at the University of Lund. With him are his wife and two children, Carl, jr., and Mary Elizabeth.

The Rev. Joseph Leitch, assistant pastor of St Mary's Church, in Alexandria, Va., left for a vacation in Europe about two weeks ago and no word has been heard of him since the outbreak of war, according to friends here. Father Leitch planned to seek an audience with the Pope in Rome, and later visit other European cities.

Takoma Park Mourns Loss of German Family

MARIE MERCEDES FRITZSCHING.

While Americans await news of countrymen in war-stricken Europe, residents in Takoma Park are wondering whether a German family of long residence there ever will return to their residence at 600 Cedar street northwest.

The family, popular with all its neighbors, is that of Kurt Fritzsching, consular secretary of the German Embassy here, consisting of his wife and two daughters, Mercedes and Irene. The family lived in Takoma Park for ten years.

Situated on the corner of Piney Branch road and Sixth street, the lavishly furnished Fritzsching home is a Takoma Park landmark. During their residence there it was the scene of many parties for Takoma Park folk since the envoy and his wife were good bridge players and mixed widely outside of embassy circles.

Before they sailed in June for a vacation of four months in Europe, the Fritzschings were much feted with dinners and parties by their American friends.

The younger set entertained extensively for the daughters, especially for Mercedes, 18, known as "Mitzie," who was valedictorian at Roosevelt High School in the February graduation class. The younger sister, known as "Hermanita," 16, also attended Roosevelt school. Every five years the Fritzschings went to Germany on furlough. This summer they traveled there through Switzerland, Italy and Czecho-Slovakia.

One of the last letters believed to have been written by "Mitzie" before war was declared was received by a close friend Friday. The letter said that "if nothing happened her parents and sister would sail from Germany for the United States September 7. The letter, postmarked August 22, was delivered here August 29 having come over on the liner Bremen.

The letter revealed that there was an "undercurrent" throughout the countries, when Mitzie described her tour.

"Things are boiling over here and expected to pop any minute" the letter read. In conclusion Mitzie wrote she hoped nothing would happen before her family sailed for America. She also wrote that she was entering a private school for 50 girls at Leoni, September 1.

Among those who entertained for the family at farewell parties were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Repert, Mr. and Mrs. H. K. Hobart, Mr. and Mrs. Charles R. Mills, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Spencer, Miss Helen Orton, Miss Doris Patterson, Miss Ruth Payne, of Takoma Park, Dr. and Mrs. Anton Lang, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Syme, Mr. and Mrs. George Kleinholtz, Miss Margaret Morse, of Washington, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Althoff, of Woodside, Md.

The Fritzschin girls were born in Venezuela. They also lived for several years at New Orleans, La.

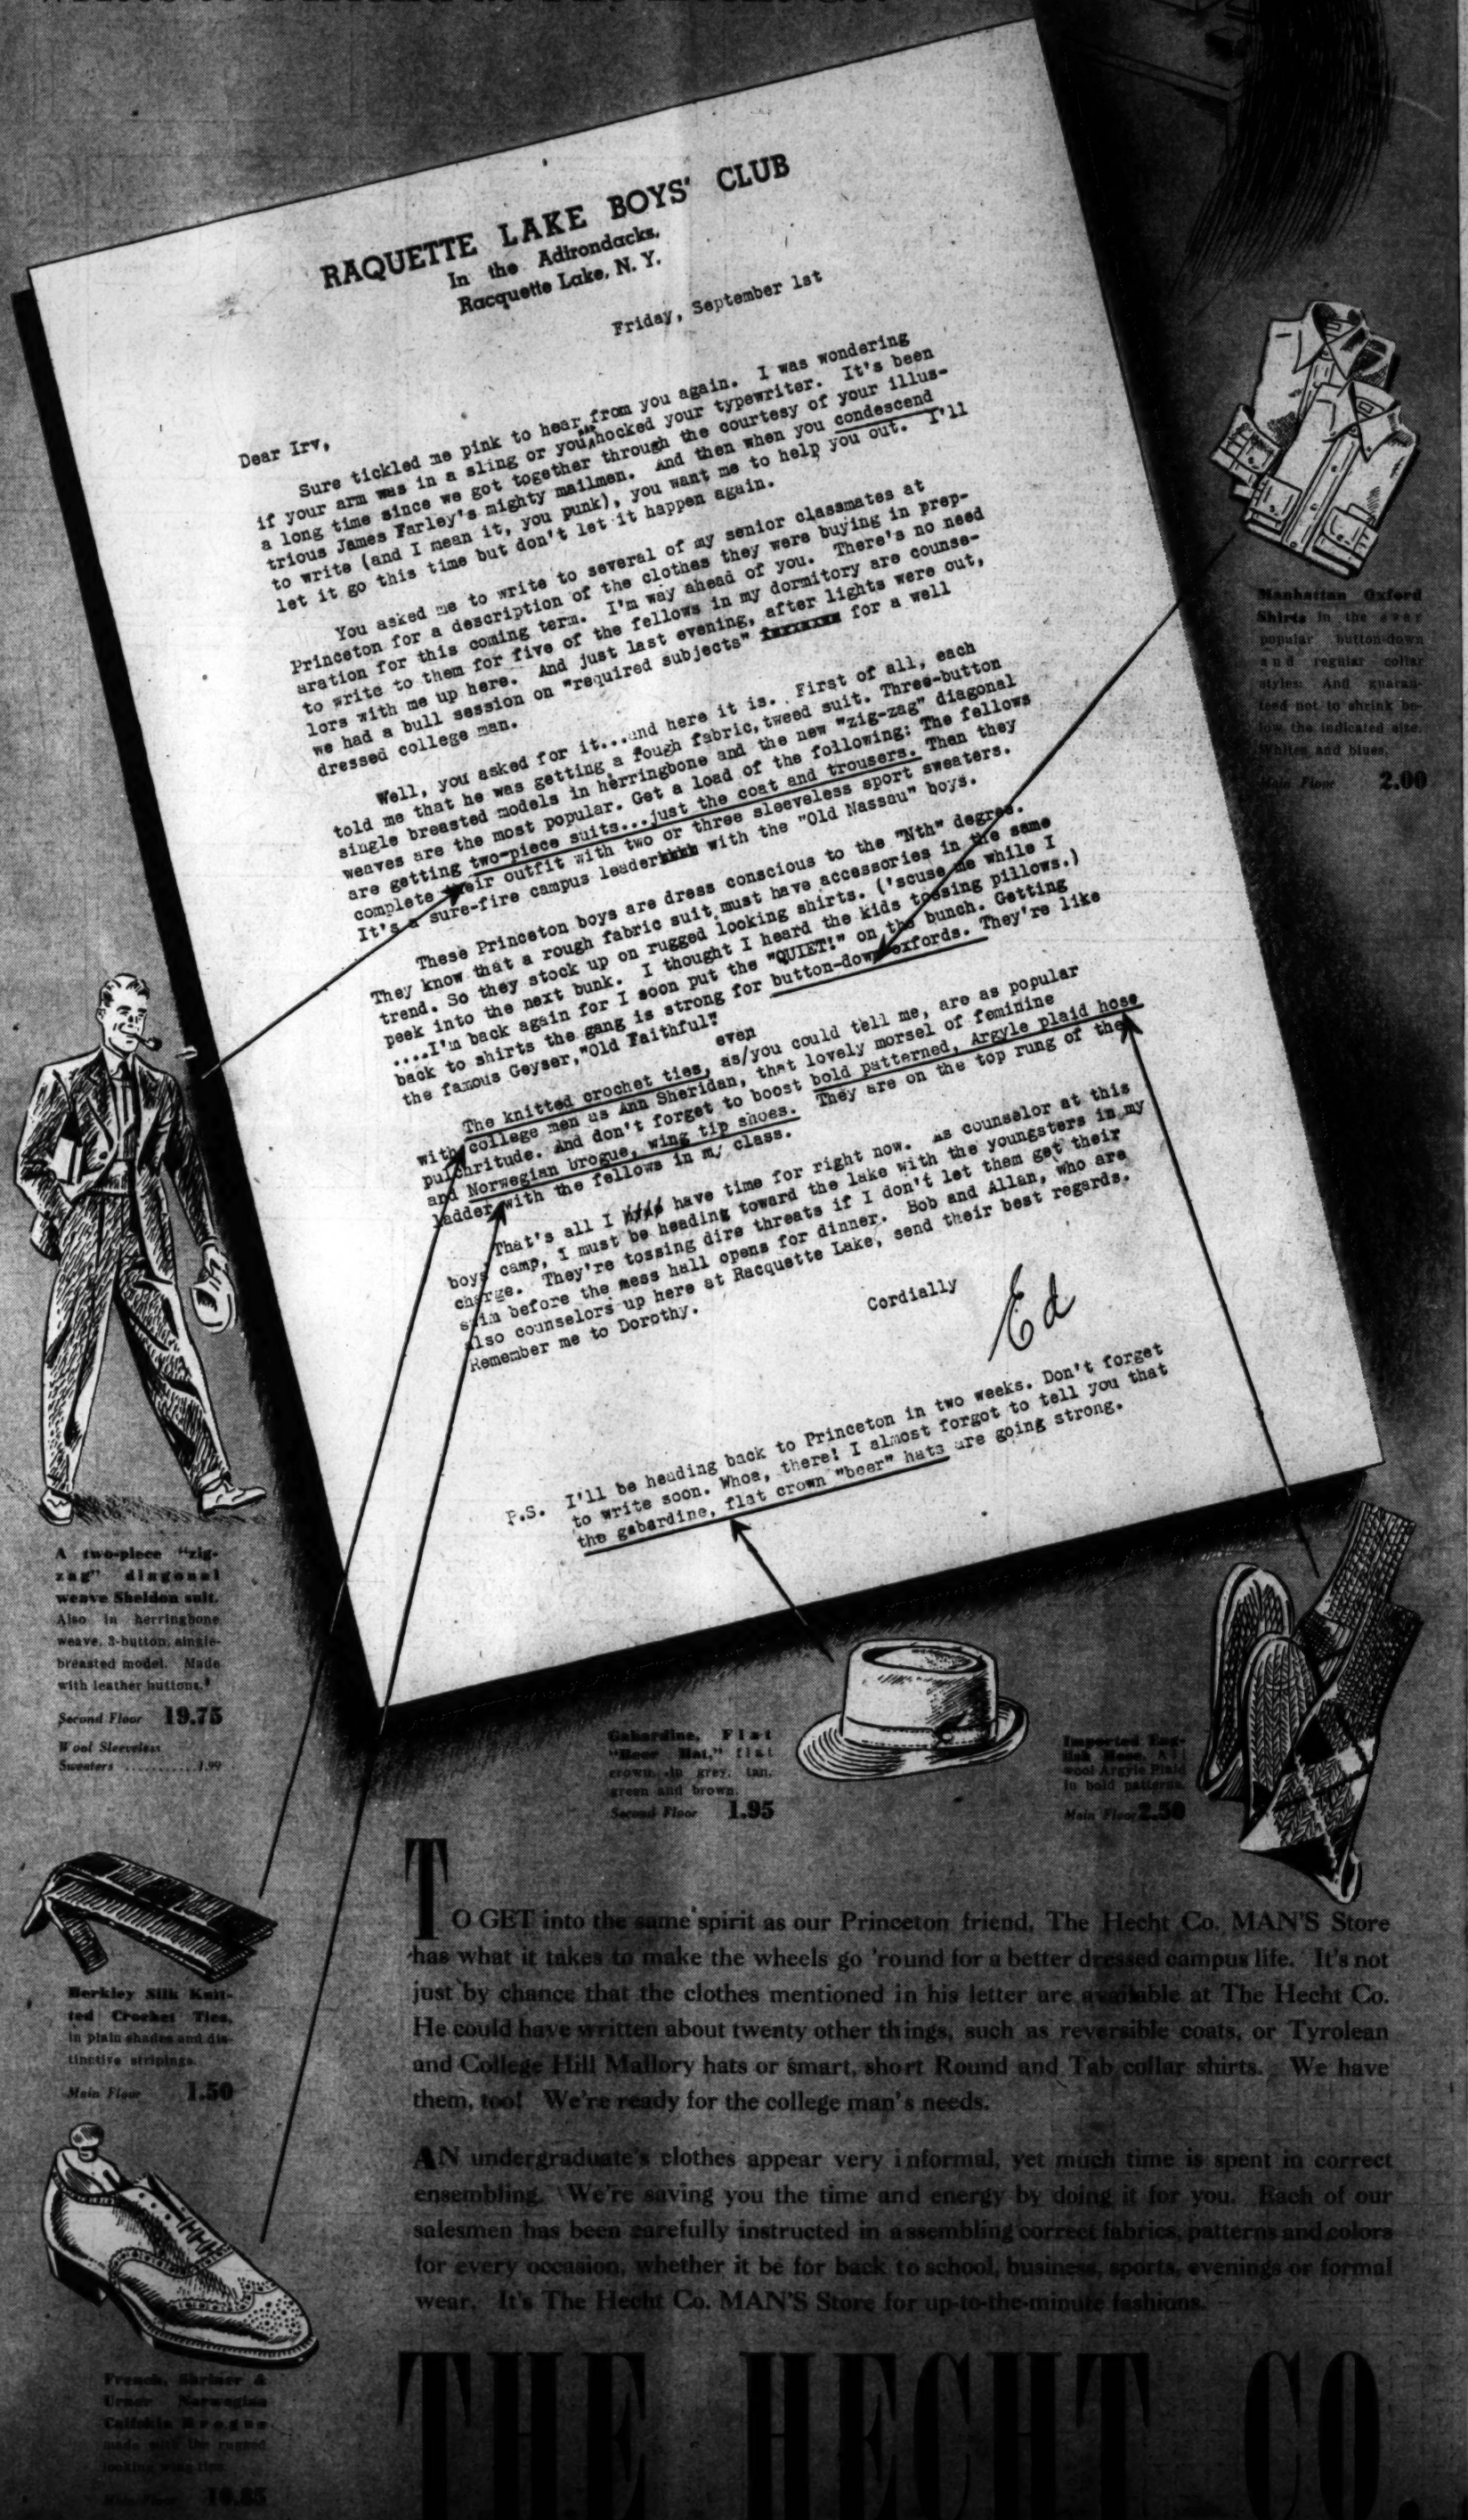
A PRINCETON MAN
writes to a friend at The Hecht Co.



RAQUETTE LAKE BOYS' CLUB
Racquette Lake, N. Y.

Friday, September 1st

Dear Irv,

Sure tickled me pink to hear from you again. I was wondering if your arm was in a sling or you'd knocked your typewriter. It's been a long time since we got together through the courtesy of your illustrious James Farley's mighty mailmen. And then when you condescend to write (and I mean it, you punk), you want me to help you out. I'll let it go this time but don't let it happen again.

You asked me to write to several of my senior classmates at Princeton for a description of the clothes they were buying in preparation for this coming term. I'm way ahead of you. There's no need to write to them for five of the fellows in my dormitory are counselors with me up here. And just last evening, after lights were out, we had a bull session on "required subjects" for a well dressed college man.

Well, you asked for it...and here it is. First of all, each told me that he was getting a tough fabric, tweed suit. Three-button single breasted models in herringbone and the new "zig-zag" diagonal weaves are the most popular. Get a load of the following: The fellows are getting two-piece suits...just the coat and trousers. Then they complete their outfit with two or three sleeveless sport sweaters. It's a sure-fire campus leader with the "Old Nassau" boys.

These Princeton boys are dress conscious to the "Nth" degree. They know that a rough fabric suit must have accessories in the same trend. So they stock up on rugged looking shirts. ('scuse me while I peek into the next bunk. I thought I heard the kids tossing pillows.) ....I'm back again for I soon put the "QUIET!" on the bunch. Getting back to shirts the gang is strong for button-down Oxfords. They're like the famous Geyser, "Old Faithful"

The knitted crochet ties, even with college men as Ann Sheridan, as you could tell me, are as popular pulchritude. And don't forget to boost that lovely morsel of feminine and Norwegian brogue, wing tip shoes. They are on the top rung of the ladder with the fellows in my class. Argyle plaid hose

That's all I have time for right now. As counselor at this boys' camp, I must be heading toward the lake with the youngsters in my charge. They're tossing dire threats if I don't let them get their swim before the mess hall opens for dinner. Bob and Allan, who are also counselors up here at Racquette Lake, send their best regards. Remember me to Dorothy.

Cordially

Ed

P.S. I'll be heading back to Princeton in two weeks. Don't forget to write soon. Whoa, there! I almost forgot to tell you that the gabardine, flat crown "beer" hats are going strong.
